Social Engineering 101: How to make a "refugee" crisis

By Tony Cartalucci
journal-neo.org

Starting in 2007, the U. S. was already in the process of engineering the overthrow and destruction of all prevailing political orders across the Middle East and North African (MENA) region.

It would be in Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Seymour Hersh's 2007 New Yorker article, "The Redirection: Is the Administration's new policy benefiting our enemies in the war on terrorism?" that it was explicitly stated (emphasis added):

> To undermine Iran, which is predominantly Shiite, the Bush Administration has decided, in effect, to reconfigure its priorities in the Middle East. In Lebanon, the Administration has cooperated with Saudi Arabia's government, which is Sunni, in clandestine operations that are intended to weaken Hezbollah, the Shiite organization that is backed by Iran. The U. S. has also taken part in clandestine operations aimed at Iran and its ally Syria. A by-product of these activities has been the bolstering of Sunni extremist groups that espouse a militant vision of Islam and are hostile to America and sympathetic to Al Qaeda.

Hersh would also reveal that at the time, the U. S. – then under the administration of President George Bush and through intermediaries including U. S.-ally Saudi Arabia – had already begun channeling funding and support to the Syrian Muslim Brotherhood who would in 2011 play a crucial role in the opening phases of the destructive war now raging across the Levant.

In 2008, from Libya to Syria and beyond, activists were drawn by the U. S. State Department from across MENA to learn the finer points of Washington and Wall Street's "color revolution" industry. They were being prepared for an unprecedented, coordinated U. S.-engineered MENA-wide campaign of political destabilization that would in 2011 be called the "Arab Spring."

Textbook manipulation

Through the U. S. State Department's National Endowment for Democracy (NED) and U. S. State Department's Movements.org, agitators were literally flown on several occasions to both New York and Washington D.C. as well as other locations around the globe to receive training, equipment and funding before returning to their home countries and attempting to overthrow their respective governments.

In an April 2011 article published by the New York Times titled, "U. S. Groups Helped Nurture Arab Uprisings," it was admitted:

> A number of the groups and individuals directly involved in the revolts and reforms sweeping the region, including the April 6 Youth Movement in Egypt, the Bahrain Center for Human Rights and grassroots activists like Entsar Qadhi, a youth leader in Yemen, received training and financing from groups like the International Republican Institute, the National Democratic Institute and Freedom House, a nonprofit human rights organization based in Washington.

The article would also add, regarding the U. S. National Endowment for Democracy (NED):

> The Republican and Democratic institutes are loosely affiliated with the Republican and Democratic Parties. They were created by Congress and are financed through the National Endowment for Democracy, which was set up in 1983 to channel grants for promoting democracy in developing Nations. The National Endowment receives about $100 million annually from Congress. Freedom House also gets the bulk of its money from the American government, mainly from the State Department.

Protocols for worldwide rule

It is clear that the political cover – the Arab Spring – and the premeditated support of terrorist groups including Al Qaeda brought in afterward, were planned years before the Arab Spring actually unfolded in 2011. The goal was admittedly the overthrow of governments obstructing Washington and Wall Street's hegemonic ambitions and part of a much wider agenda of isolating, encircling, and containing Russia and China.

The destruction of the MENA region was intentional, premeditated, and continues on to this very day.

Wave of regime changes ends

Since 2011, each and every one of the West's "color revolutions" has predictably devolved into armies of U. S.-backed terrorists attempting to divide and destroy each Nation. In Libya, this goal has already long since been accomplished. In Egypt and Syria, with varying degrees of failure, this agenda has stalled.

Egypt through sheer virtue of its size and the capabilities of its military, has prevented nationwide warfare. In Syria, facing invasion primarily from both Turkey and Jordan, violence has been far more dramatic and enduring.

But, despite initial euphoria across the West that this insidious conspiracy had indeed upended the MENA region entirely, Syria's ability to resist the West's proxy forces, and now, more direct intervention, has entirely disrupted this wave of regime change.

U. S. Senator John McCain (Republican-Arizona), who literally posed for pictures with terrorist leaders in both Libya and Syria including the now head of the so-called Islamic State (ISIS) in Libya, Abdul Hakim Belhaj, at the height of the Arab Spring prematurely taunted Moscow and Beijing with threats to bring similarly U. S.-orchestrated chaos in their direction. Suffice it to say, Moscow and Beijing were not only ready for this destabilization but prepared to foil it before it so much as reached their borders.

And, as momentum stalled, the U. S. and its regional collaborators attempted to justify direct military intervention in Syria first as they did in Libya – by claiming they would be averting a humanitarian disaster and assisting "freedom fighters." However, with all those crimes the U. S. and NATO perpetrated in Libya still fresh in the global public's minds, this narrative was entirely untenable.

Staged chemical weapon attacks were perpetrated on the outskirts of Damascus under the nose of U. N. inspectors in a bid to frame the government of Damascus and again justify direct U. S. military intervention against Syria. Again, the global public, recalling similar fabrications peddled by the West ahead of its ten year invasion and occupation of Iraq – along with expert diplomacy by Moscow – averted war.

And, while it is increasingly obvious that Al Qaeda and ISIS' presence in Syria and Iraq is the direct, premeditated result of U. S.-NATO and their regional allies' sponsorship of both groups, the West has attempted to use them as a pretext for direct military intervention not only in Syria, but again, against the government of Damascus itself.

As this last attempt to justify a final push toward regime change in Syria falters, and REPORTERS didn't try to contain their glee that the Kentucky courthouse having refused to issue "gay marriage" licenses now does so after the clerk who wouldn't comply went to jail. Pro-queer reporting is today stock propaganda. A "journalist" must champion or promote "The Other," i.e., anyone who is not a straight, White male. This has a twofold effect: it demoralizes normal Aryans who, of course, created Western culture, while lionizing the fags, Blacks, Browns and riffraff that are busy perverting our heritage and everything we stand for.

GENUINE conservatives must, above all else, conserve Western culture. William F. Buckley, Jr., wasn't really one, though he thought otherwise. To be a conservative means opposing Jews, Blacks and Browns. Buckley didn't. But he did pronounce this truth: "Freedom breeds inequality." And of course the opposite holds: to get "equality" requires restricting freedom.

Scalawag of the Month
David Bunning

Judge jails principled clerk

We're not out to cure this world of its foibles. Let the fool be foolish but not right in our faces. A queer doesn't become moral just because getting some paper license. Who is less self governed than an already licentious buffoon to begin with?

By Bill Ebb
firstfreedom.net

Kim Davis, the embattled courthouse clerk of Rowan County, Kentucky, was back at work on September 14, after five days in jail for refusing to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

This is not about another Federal judge legislating from the bench, just following orders from those supremes who are doing the same or simply getting intoxicated on power; they've drunk that stuff since 1865. It concerns taking such judicial tyranny a step farther than what honorable people can tolerate.

For the moment, it is only within our power to label him a scalawag, but that will change. Straights are waking up to such crooks' agendas and deciding we must stop them from getting further along with where they imagine themselves headed.

On September 3 at Ashland, Kentucky, U. S. District Judge David Bunning jailed Ms. Davis for her refusal to issue marriage licenses to same-sex queers. He also got pledges from five of Davis' six deputy clerks that they would issue licenses to anyone, including same-sex couples (and even animals or trees?). The judge told them they would be ordered to return to the U. S. District Court in Ashland, Kentucky, if they did not.

Some reluctantly agreed, saying they were balancing personal convictions and family responsibilities, along with faith. The sixth deputy clerk, Davis' son Nathan, would not agree to issue licenses, but saw no jail time, he and his mother being the only two non-scalawags whose principles outweighed their trepidations before that power-drunken U. S. Federal judge.

Ms. Davis' deputies issued at least seven such commanded licenses in her absence, removing her name from them as they did. Brian Mason, the deputy clerk, said he would continue to do so in spite of Davis' objections.

The "supreme" court renders opinions – not "laws." The State of Kentucky, along with many other States, defines "marriage" as being "between a man and a woman." Until State laws are changed to reflect the "supreme" court's opinion, homosexuals have no legal standing to demand any kind of "marriage licenses." The judge having jailed Kim Davis should be brought up on charges of false imprisonment and quickly impeached.

Seriously, now

A mechanic is removing a cylinder head from the motor of a Harley motorcycle when he spots a well-known heart surgeon in his shop. The latter is there waiting for the service manager to come and take a look at his bike. The mechanic shouts to him across the garage: "Hey, Doc, can I ask you a question?"

The surgeon, a bit surprised, walks over to see what this is about. Straightening up from that Harley, the mechanic wipes his hands on a rag and asks, "So, Doc, here's an engine. I open its heart, take valves out, fix 'em, put 'em back in, and when I finish, it works just like new. So how come I get such a small salary and you're into really big bucks, when both of us are basically doing the same work?"

The surgeon pauses, smiles, leans over and whispers to the mechanic…

"Try doing it with the engine running."

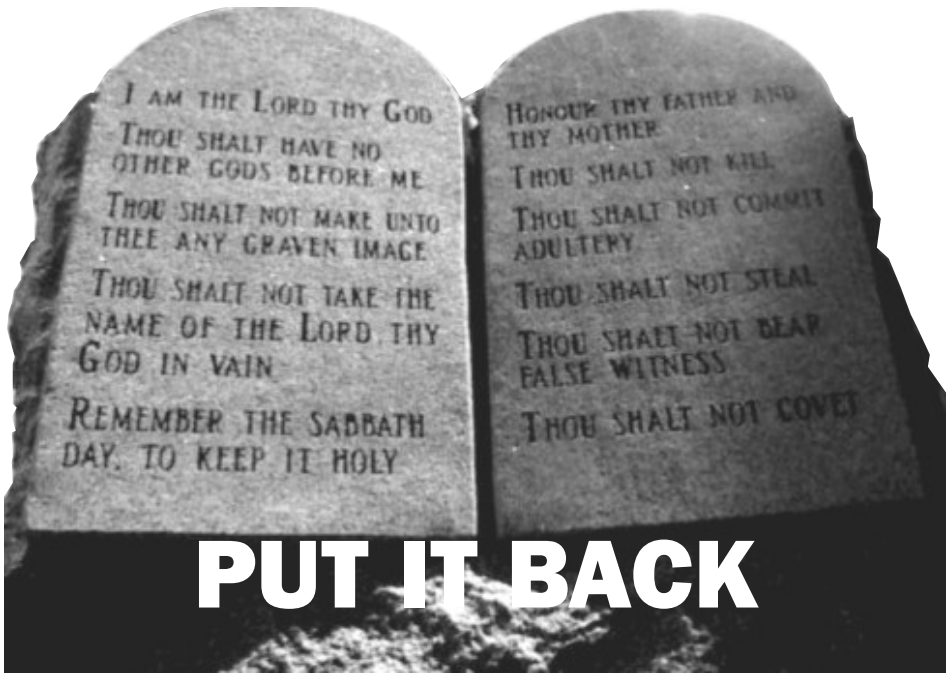
Ethics as usual

By Frank Sonnenberg
franksonnenbergonline.com

One of the first things we learn as children is the difference between right and wrong (the punishment being that time-out chair). Yet, as we grow up, one too easily forgets the simple lessons that we learned in kindergarten; the line between acceptable and unacceptable behavior gets blurred, contributing to a decline in moral ethics and values.

This lack of ethical clarity – inability to maintain rigorous standards of right and wrong – is not only confusing, it also erodes trust, damages relationships, destroys moral leadership and weakens the fabric of our society. It's time to put an end to ethics as usual by restoring those standards of decency and trust.



Your "representatives" – forbidden by the Southern Puberty Lechery Center, a federal Affirmative Action Apparatchik and those new voting machines to display such reminders in a building full of judges, lawyers and politicians – have banished the Ten Commandments from Alabama's Supreme Court now for 145 months.

Why this precipitous decline in morals and ethics?

Do as I say. Whereas politicians create laws, often they ignore them; while bosses make the rules, many then subvert them. And, while parents teach their children values, they turn around and breach them. How can rules be taken seriously when the creators of those standards don't embrace what they espouse?

To whom do these rules apply? The sad truth is that ethical standards are not applied equally. Athletes, actors, rock stars, politicians and corporate chieftains serve as "role models" for our children. We may find it entertaining when some of these people adopt "wild" lifestyles, yet are appalled when our kids mimic their behavior.

We pay top dollar to attend concerts and sporting events headlining people routinely accused of drug possession, marital infidelity, inexplicable language and driving while intoxicated, yet society hails them for their performance while excusing such actions. Would you be judged the same way for committing those offenses?

Double standards

At the same time we keep supporting politicians who come up short on ethical probes, tax audits or standards of human decency, we as citizens can get the book thrown at us for neglecting to pay a parking ticket on time. George Orwell got it right in Animal Farm with "All animals are equal, but some are more equal than others." The fact is, we send mixed messages when allowing some people to be reprimanded for their actions while the privileged few either buy their way out of punishment or get off with a mere slap on the wrist.

The finish line keeps moving. How can we be expected to abide by a moral code of conduct when actions are inappropriate one day and appropriate the next? I clearly remember a time when foul language on TV set off alarm bells, yet over the years it has become commonplace. Furthermore, even though we've learned that it's wrong to tell a lie, some "role models" believe that nuances such as "white lies," mere exaggerations and "spinning the truth" don't count.

Most of these infractions do not attract sufficient attention. Over time, however, the cumulative effect of such transgressions is significant – and the bar is lowered as a result.

Just don't get caught. Some people believe that an indiscretion is allowed as long as you get away with it. When we try to evade individual responsibility by outsourcing our consciences to bureaucrats and pundits, that conscience begins to atrophy.

You're part of either the problem or its solution

Being a role model carries responsibility. If you're a teacher, clergyman, actor, executive, athlete, politician or a parent, certain ones look up to you as a role model and imitate your behavior. Are you proud of the signals that you're sending? If not, it's time to get that act together! No one is asking you to be a saint, but living a life of commendable ethics and values is a good place to start.

Enough is enough. Where is your outrage? (Yes, you!) It's time we stop excusing the unacceptable behavior of people masquerading as role models and expose them for the ethical derelicts they are.

When people are held accountable for the wake of destruction they cause through ethical negligence, they'll have a choice… get right or face the consequences.

Stop looking the other way. Every person can make a difference by shining the spotlight on inappropriate behavior. In fact, according to psychological research, one person's opinion can sway the views of an entire group. The rationale is simple: People assume that, if a lot of people do something, it must be "okay." That's because the autopilot switch in all of us instructs us to follow the crowd. It's well known that a herd mentality works best when a group is isolated from all external factors so that its members cannot receive outside influence. (Think Jim Jones.) All it takes is one person to question the logic (in the company of others), and that entire group may begin to question its logic. Remember, if we don't expose the group's unacceptable behavior, we are condoning such actions.

One law

Actions have consequences. Not holding people accountable for their behavior, we create a slippery slope. Understandably, it's difficult when a newly elected politician, most valuable player on the team, award winning performer or most productive employee turns around and discredits the organization with his or her actions. We shouldn't have rules for one person and a different set for others. When we bend the rules and make "exceptions," norms shift and poor behavior is viewed as acceptable.

Leaders must start leading. They should live up to the definition of that term, "leader," serving not only as positive role models themselves but holding colleagues accountable for their actions. The fact is, if a member of the organization commits an egregious act, that reflects on the violator, his organization and its leader. If the leader defends an ethical deviant, turns a blind eye to the action or sweeps that act under the rug, such behavior is condoned. This tells others that ethical standards are not priorities, and that short-term performance is more important than the reputation of an organization.

Your character matters most when no one is looking. I long for the day when honor has meaning, in which world most people do the right thing because they know that what goes around comes around. And, if it doesn't, they know they'll get paid back in karma points.

Rediscovering virtue

People must follow the spirit as well as letter of the law. This should be a world in which shaking someone's hand becomes a contract and where one's reputation is a valued asset. Let us have a world in which people go to great lengths protecting their family names, and leaders see their first responsibility as strengthening the trust and credibility of their institutions. In such a setting, people will do the right thing not only because it's considered acceptable behavior, but because they know every action affects another. Let it not remain necessary for people to be policed by bureaucracies, where everyone sees it as his duty to call out unacceptable behavior.

Ethical derelicts must be disgraced and shunned for their misdeeds. When people are accountable to themselves, their own conscience becomes the guide.

The golden mean of honest endeavor

By Brandon
branemrys.blogspot.com

Aristotle discusses the virtue of truth briefly in Nicomachean Ethics IV. 7. He posits truthfulness as the mean between boasting and mock-modesty. As he says, "The man who observes the mean is one who calls a thing by its own name, being truthful both in life and in word, owning to what he has, and neither more nor less." Truth for Aristotle, then, is primarily about oneself, neither exaggerating or understating that self; and it is in this light that we make sense of his claim that truth is more noble than falsehood.

He argues that truthfulness is closer to mock-modesty than boastfulness: boastful people we find contemptible, but the mock-modest, if they don't go too far, can even seem attractive. Aristotle's conception of truthfulness is pretty close to what we would call frankness.

Steadfast in every situation

Aquinas starts here when he discusses the virtue of truth, and, in fact, agrees with Aristotle's definition for truthfulness; distinguishing it from other senses of truth, he says (in ST 2-2.109) that it is "that truth whereby a man, both in life and in speech, shows himself to be such as he is, and the things that concern him, not other, and neither greater nor less, than they are." But he uses this as a leverage point to fit more into the concept of truthfulness than ever does Aristotle explicitly. The way he does this is by recognizing that what we know and believe is part of who we are. So, if we are going to be truthful about ourselves, truthfulness then is about our beliefs and knowledge.

Observing all as best we can

For the same reason, Aristotle suggested, "To say what is true is a good act," but truthfulness about oneself necessarily requires that we be truthful about the world as we know it to be. This truthfulness gives us a simplicity, in a positive sense, because it excludes duplicity, "whereby a man pretends one thing and intends another." Aquinas's virtue of truthfulness is annexed to, or a potential part of, justice, "through having something in common with justice, while falling short from the complete virtue thereof." Like justice, truthfulness is directed to others and involves a kind of equal exchange (in this case, sign for thing). Also, like justice, it involves rendering someone what is due to him:

Since man is a social animal, any one man naturally owes another whatever is necessary for the preservation of human society. Now it would be impossible for men to live together unless they believed one another, as declaring the truth one to another. Hence the virtue of truth does, in a manner, regard something as being due.

It differs from justice, however, in the sense that the debt, i.e., what is due, is purely moral. In this sense it is more like equity (which, roughly, concerns the spirit of the law) than like justice in the strictest sense.

William Whewell, in his The Elements of Morality, includes truth as one of the five principal virtues: benevolence, justice, truth, purity and order. Justifying truth's placement in this August company, he says (Vol. I, Book III, Chapter II),

"[A]mong the necessary conditions of a rule of human action is the existence of a common understanding among men, such that they can depend on each other's actions. Lying and deceit tend to separate and disunite men; and to make all actions implying mutual dependence, that is, all social action and social life, impossible.

Like Aquinas, Whewell holds that truthfulness involves a moral right rather than a jural or legal one; and, because truth in this sense involves a consistency between internal and external actions, he also calls it integrity.

Living a straightforward life

Each of the principal virtues in Whewell's scheme involves duties that are characterized by principles or precepts. The principle that belongs to truth as such (discussed in Volume I, Book III, Chapter IX) is "that we must conform to the universal understanding among men which the use of language implies," or, to put it more colloquially and briefly, that we must not lie. As one would expect a Victorian to do, he takes a very strong stance on the duties associated with truth: the duties of truth extend beyond lying in the proper sense to rule out any form of deception whatsoever. Because of this, Whewell thinks, we ought to cultivate what he calls the spirit of truth: we ought to cultivate virtues such as openness, frankness, simplicity of character and singleness of heart by repeatedly engaging in truthful actions, so that we are far removed from any kind of deceit.

Whewell's conception of virtue, however, is slightly different from Aristotle's and Aquinas's; for Whewell, morality consists in conforming our lives as best we can to moral ideas. Thus Whewell posits truth and the rest as ideals of moral life, to be continually approached and approximated.

Must all the Western governments betray their own?

Exclusive to The First Freedom
Translated, compiled and edited by Richard Noegel resistancerepublicaine.eu

Europe: the countries that have it in view to seize your property and place it at the disposal of these "refugees"…

The current submersion of Europe is no fantasy despite what experts say on TV, but a very dangerous reality. Overwhelmed by this unprecedented flood of immigrants, Western governments, under orders from those good Samaritans at the E. U., do not know how to manage the looming humanitarian catastrophe. So they are asking the people to help and are appealing to their good hearts – before taking the next step, which will be to impose through law the reception of migrants by requisitioning [the peoples'] unoccupied real estate.

And, if that is not sufficient, given the uninterrupted flood, will they impose their desire by force of law, and require that citizens take refugees into their homes… all while relegating the homeowners to the basement in order to receive the poor "refugees" with "dignity"?

Beleaguered

In Italy, an extravagant solution has been suggested to the Mayor of Rome, a city in bankruptcy, by the undersecretary of the Ministry of the Interior, Domenico Manzione, [and] the Mayor of Rome is rushing to accept [it] with a most touching enthusiasm. "[I am] proposing that immigrants be placed with host families for a payment of 900 euros per month, taken from the public treasury, or 30 euros per refugee per day, [whether] child or adult." (Source: Marino finanzia gli immigrati: 900 euro al mese a chi li ospita: Il Giornale.it)

In order to set an example for good people, shouldn't members of the government – the whole lot of them – take the first step by hosting in the bosom of their own families one of these poor refugees in search of a better life?

In Belgium:

In view of the urgency of the migrants' situation, the Belgian bishops and Caritas [a Europe-wide Christian charity] are launching an appeal for solidarity [with the invaders]. They are asking the property-owning faithful to place their property at the refugees' disposal, charging a low rent that will be paid by Caritas. Pope Francis has appealed once again for Catholics to mobilize for welcoming migrants and refugees – an appeal heard in Belgium. "We are in a crisis," said Tommy Scholtès, spokesman for the [Belgian] Bishops Conference, to our reporter [i.e., reporter for Résistance Républicaine] Christophe Giltay. "Several months ago, I heard the Pope in Strasbourg saying that the Mediterranean was threatening to become the graveyard of Europe. And I said to myself, 'Something has got to be done.' And things have only gotten worse. What is needed is a global mobilization [and of] the whole Church in Belgium and also of Caritas International to organize that welcome."

Caritas is looking for small, one-person apartments, but also for more spacious places to host families. These lodgings have to be habitable, available for at least six months, and be fitted out with kitchens and bathrooms.

Caritas will assure payment of rents and eventual [permanent] settlement. This solution is preferable to the direct hosting that some persons would like to offer to migrants. "We thought we could solve the problem by finding responsible property owners to accommodate the migrants and to ensure that they really can be housed and integrated into [European] society," explained François Cornet, director of Caritas International.

"It has to be said that the needs are enormous. Even though the initiative has been launched by the Catholic Church, the apartments will be available to every migrant, regardless of his nationality or religion." (Source: RTL/Info)

Reactions to the appeal have been lively: they run from indignation to the expression of a feeling of profound injustice, for the Belgians are living precariously, [including] the needy [and] families who have been waiting for housing for two to three years, [but] they do not seem to excite the benevolent attention of the Belgian bishops or of Caritas. Priority [is] for the migrants! This selective charity of the Catholic church is revolting to [Belgian] citizens.

Elsewhere:

[In Germany], it is more than a simple appeal to the good feelings of the inhabitants; [instead] it is an outright requisition of empty private houses through a temporary restriction of the fundamental right of property that is looming.

The Mayor of Salzgitter, Frank Klingabiel (CDU) [Christliche Democratische Union – Christian Democrat Party – Angela Merkel's party] has decided to restrict "temporarily" the fundamental rights of property. By reason of the massive flood of asylum-seekers, the mayor intends to requisition empty private houses.

The mayor promises that property owners will be indemnified. But how much? By whom? For how long? What is a property owner to do if he wishes to reclaim the property for his own use and benefit? In what state will the property owner find his property [if he gets it back] and who is going to pay to repair the damages after [the property has been] sacked [by the invaders]?

This measure, which reveals a "democratic totalitarianism," is supported by the [German] federal government, which estimates that it will have to adopt "state of emergency" legislation. The mayor of Salzgitter has even asked that [German] municipalities be allowed to take out special loans to finance the migrants' asylum!

The scandal is all the greater as Europe has many citizens living in precarious financial circumstances, but who have no access to the [public] services offered to these migrants.

It is no wonder that there is an ever-growing number of anti-immigration and anti-Islamization demonstrations and violence against current or future housing for migrants: Germany is confronted with a record flood of asylum-seekers, which have already reached 800,000 so far this year. [This in a country with a population of 80 million.]

In Slovakia:

Finally – a responsible government! Is a hopeful sun rising in the east? The Slovakian government declared [August 26, 2015] that they would accept only Christians among the 200 Syrian refugees to be accommodated within the E. U.'s framework of refugee resettlement plans.

Ivan Metik, spokesman for the Interior Ministry, emphasized that Muslims would not be accepted, for "they would not feel at home," because there are no mosques in [Slovakia], among other reasons.

"We want to help Europe with this wave of immigration, but we are only a transit country, [and] people do not want to stay in Slovakia," the Slovak spokesman told BBC TV.

The Prime Minister declared that his country does not have to receive refugees from conflicts in which [Slovakia] has played no role whatsoever. Referring to the NATO intervention against Kadhafi's Libya, Robert Fico posed the upsetting question thus: "Who bombed Libya? Who created the problems in North Africa? Slovakia? No."

Slovakian [public] opinion seems obviously more than reluctant to receive refugees. A village near Bratislava, the capital, recently held a referendum on the opportunity to host 500 asylum-seekers temporarily. Ninety-seven per cent of the voters rejected the proposal.

Yet Muslims make up 0.2% of the five million inhabitants of the country. In 2014, Slovakia granted asylum to only 14 persons. (Source: MPI)

In response, Thomas de Maizière, the German Interior Minister, said during a televised interview, "Then maybe it's time to build some mosques in Slovakia!"

With such politicians, all [of them] allied with the cause of Islam, the Caliph of those cutthroats in the Islamic State will keep stroking his beard and dreaming of conquering the West.

From another source:

http://newobserveronline.com/czech-magazine-withdraws-article-which-revealed-that-czechs-would-vote-for-hitler/

The Czech magazine, Týden, hastily withdrew an article which indicated that around 60 percent of respondents in a telephone poll conducted by the magazine would vote for Adolf Hitler if he returned today and promised to rid Europe of the current wave of invaders presenting themselves as "asylum seekers."

According to the Czech government, police detain "hundreds" of invaders every day. The invaders are in no internationally accepted sense "refugees" because they have already crossed numerous safe countries before reaching the Czech Republic – and indeed many of them come from third world countries where there are no civil wars.

According to Czech law, foreigners without a residence permit and entry clearance are automatically detained until their status is resolved – which in the invaders' case will mean deportation.

Typical traitor:

"We are a country of immigration," German Interior Minister, Thomas de Maizière, told a news conference in Berlin. Germany expects the number of asylum seekers it receives to quadruple to about 800,000 in 2015. De Maizière said the country could handle that number this year, but not over the long term. "We need migrants because we have too few children," de Maiziere added. "It is, as ever, a question of the degree."

So close they can smell it – again

Honest people do not have time nor means to go on such ten-year killing sprees. Who is financing all this terrorism? Can it be the usual instigators of wars to end wars and against poverty, drugs, terrorism, xenophobia, etc.?

newobserveronline.com

An ISIS terrorist posing as an "asylum seeker" has been arrested by German police in a "refugee" center in Stuttgart, and German customs officers have seized boxes containing Syrian passports being smuggled into Europe.

According to a report carried by RTL's German language service, the terrorist is a 21-year-old Moroccan using a "false identity" who had registered as an asylum seeker in the district of Ludwigsburg. He was identified after police linked him to a European arrest warrant issued by Spanish authorities. He is accused of recruiting fighters for ISIS, where he acted as a contact person for fighters who wanted to travel to Syria or Iraq.

This first confirmed arrest of a bogus "asylum seeker" came simultaneously with the admission by a German finance ministry spokesman that "boxes" of fake Syrian passports, destined for sale and distribution to the hordes of nonwhite invaders seeking to settle in Europe as bogus "war refugees," had been seized.

That news, carried in a report by the German Tagespiegel newspaper, also revealed that 10,000 fake Syrian passports were seized by police in Bulgaria on their way to Germany.

The finance ministry official said both genuine and forged passports were in the packets intercepted in the post. Possession of these passports is a vital part of claiming "asylum" as "war refugees."

The Tagespiegel also revealed that the fake Syrian passports were being sold for about $1,500 each – and the fact that many of the "refugees" can afford to purchase multiple passports is yet another indication of the bogus nature of their claims to be "asylum seekers."

Significantly, the Tagespiegel article continued, "It is not only Syrians who are interested in Syrian passports. Refugees from Iraq, Afghanistan and Pakistan want to become Syrian in order to secure their recognition as asylum seekers in Western Europe. According to press reports, nine out of ten refugees who migrated from Macedonia to Serbia claimed they were Syrians."

The trade in fake Syrian passports was also confirmed by the head of the E. U. frontier police, Fabrice Leggeri, in a recent interview with the Europe 1 TV station.

Leggeri told Europe 1 that this trade in the fake Syrian passports originated in Turkey. "There are people who are now in Turkey, buying false Syrian passports because they have obviously realized that it is a windfall since Syrians get asylum in all member States in the European Union," he said.

"People who use false Syrian passports often speak in Arabic. They may originate in North Africa or the Middle East, but have the profile of economic migrants."

Liberty's "religious" enemies

By Thomas DiLorenzo
LewRockwell.com

Tyrants have always known that they must either infiltrate and control the clergy or destroy it. For, in the tyrant's mind, there can never be two sovereigns. If God is your sovereign, then those who run the State are not, period. The word of God cannot be used to challenge the word of kings, princes and potentates. It is potentially a lethal challenge to their supposed "authority" over anyone and everyone.

Ancient monarchs claimed a "divine right of kings," implying that anything the king said or did was, by definition, divine. Disobey the king and you were disobeying God himself. The clergy of the day were rewarded with pelf and power in return for supporting this false religion.

In more modern times the Soviet Union simply murdered thousands of priests. What little remnant was left of religion in the world's biggest socialist paradise was staffed by KGB agents posing as priests, as Yuri Maltsev, a former advisor to Mikhail Gorbachev and now an American citizen, has said. These Potemkin Village churches allowed the Soviet regime to tell the Big Lie that there was still freedom of religion under Communism.

American politicians are not much different in that they possess a lust to dominate others. That is why they are politicians in the first place. But America's political tyrants have never relied on voodoo-like theories of their own divinity, with the exception of the myth of Abraham Lincoln (affectionately known as "Father Abraham" to Lincoln cultists). Nor have they generally gone about mass murdering priests (although they did murder Mormons in the nineteenth century, and New Englanders were once quite intolerable of those whom they claimed to be practicing witchcraft). Instead, in quintessential American fashion, religion has come to be largely controlled and neutered by the State through the instruments of the tax code and the federal budget.

It is rare for a self-proclaimed "conservative" minister to ever voice anything but the mildest criticism of government, for they are all in mortal fear of losing their tax exemptions for doing so. Not only that, but many churches receive direct grants from the government and are therefore bribed into silence. Catholic Charities, Lutheran Social Services and the Jewish Federations receive more than half of their revenues from governments, for example.

President George W. Bush dealt a death blow to true religious freedom with his "Faith-Based Initiative" that dishes out several billion dollars each year in taxpayer dollars to (presumably politically well-behaved) churches. Obama has continued and escalated these subsidies.

Even ministers who personally believe that the welfare/warfare State is immoral and destructive – especially of families — rarely, if ever, bring the subject up with their flocks for fear of losing their tax exemptions, subsidies, and consequently their salaries, perks and prestige in the community.

FIGHTING TERRORISM SINCE 1861

There is nothing "wrong" with churches becoming politicized per se in the eyes of the State, however. There is only a risk of losing your tax exemption if you, as a minister, preach opposition to the State. The federal government has never lifted a finger to harass all of the left-wing Black churches and ministers under the direction of highly politicized Jesse Jackson/Al Sharpton-style preachers, for example. Preaching the lies of the State – especially the lies used to "justify" the State's wars – is welcomed and often rewarded with "faith-based" subsidies of all kinds.

As Pastor Chuck Baldwin of Liberty Fellowship in Kalispell, Montana (www.libertyfellowshipmontana.com) recently pointed out in a sermon, there are even ministers of "mega-churches" who fly around the country in private jets paid for by foreign governments "to preach global warfare" to their fellow "evangelical" Christians. (I would have said "paid for by a foreign government, in the singular, but that's just me).

In fact, Pastor Baldwin has given up his 501(c)(3) tax exempt status so that he can preach the truth and speak truth to the power of the State without worrying about the State trying to put his small Montana church out of business. (Lew Rockwell similarly gave up his tax-exempt status for LewRockwell.com when Ron Paul ran for president so that we could all feel free to speak the truth about Ron and what he stands for without being harassed by the IRS).

If one visits Pastor Baldwin's website (www.libertyfellowshipmontana.com), one might listen to sermons and read his columns calling the police, with some exceptions, "an occupying military force" in America that has been unconstitutionally militarized primarily by the Department of Homeland Security and the U.S. PATRIOT Act. One can hear him telling his fellow parishioners that the Republican Party has two great loves: "foreign wars abroad and a Police State at home." He is not praising the GOP for these things.

The "silent pastor" who says nothing of this to his parishioners, says Pastor Baldwin, is "helping to put the chains [of the State] around your neck." He condemns the "Gestapo-like tactics of the Boston police" after the Boston Marathon bombing and is a fierce advocate of the right to bear arms. It is a man's Biblical duty, he says, to make himself capable of protecting his family. So, if you do not own an automatic rifle, get one, he advises.

Chuck Baldwin has successfully raised thousands of dollars to help other like-minded ministers create what he calls "Liberty Churches" that, because they are not tax exempt, can freely speak truth to power. He does not advocate that the government eliminate the tax-exempt status of churches, and neither does yours truly. His objective is for more and more churches to become educational vehicles about the evils and immorality of the State. He is taking on the State-worshiping ministers of the "mega-churches" who have essentially sold their souls to the State for power, money, and prestige.

Is Trump your choice? The bigger picture

By Pat Shannan
ini-world-report.org

Ever since I discovered the secrets of electronic vote rigging, I have had little interest in politics. Well, backtracking for a moment, I didn't discover it, Jim and Ken Collier (younger than I but both now deceased, hmmm), were the first in Florida 45 years ago, long before the fraud had even evolved to its current electronic chicanery. I only uncovered the information by reading their book – VOTE$CAM – around 1994, and by following the research and evidence of others ever since.

Truth at last?

American elections are a joke, a theater charade, which is nothing short of what Donald Trump has been exposing all summer. Truth terrifies the mass liars, and that is all that The Don has been spreading: truth. He says the same things over the Controlled Mass Media microphone to millions that we say to each other in the coffee shops, and his enemies don't know how to stymie truth. The backroom training confab at Faux News in the hours before an interview has to be: "And if he says that, then you say this" . . . etc. The problem they then face is a new one for them. Because Trump doesn't have to be politically correct, he answers honestly from the heart and not with something that might be more satisfying to voters back home. He has no voters back home. He is trying to wrest that attitude away from the powers in DC and put it back in the hands of We, the People. I believe that of this date, September of 2015, Donald Trump might just be for real.

But I did watch some of the televised debate last month, mainly to see just how far out on the back-stabbing limb the questioners might climb before Trump would chop it off – and that was pretty much what happened. Probably the most courageous response by Trump was his raising of his hand when the loaded question – obviously aimed right at him by Bret Baier – was Is there anyone on stage, and can I see hands? Who is unwilling tonight to pledge your support to the eventual nominee of the Republican party and pledge to not run an independent campaign against that person? Again, we're looking for you to raise your hand now – raise your hand now if you won't make that pledge tonight. Trump was the only one to do so.

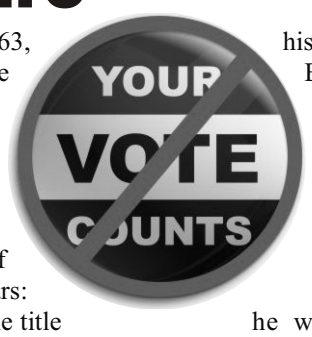
Of course, the big news of the next day was Donald Trump's honest reaction, reflected as "a shill for Hillary and the Democrats," etc., because an independent campaign by Trump would almost certainly split the conservative vote to the point of rendering a Republican win impossible.

Clinching it

But the bigger news to those of us paying attention was that Donald Trump had just received a promise from everyone else standing there that they were pledging their campaign-long support, convention to election, if he should be the Republican candidate. This includes Sen. Rand Paul, who is definitely not a "chip off the old block" and seems to become a little more obnoxious with each public appearance, while Trump continues to snatch away more of Paul's former followers.

But we've got news for ya': he can't make it – at least not the Donald Trump that is running in 2015. The same guy will not be allowed to reappear as President in 2017. It's against the rules.

We've said it before, but it's time for a reminder. November 22, 1963, was the day the rules for the new game were announced to the world and especially the American voters. Every incoming new occupant of the Oval Office has the unspoken words of a half century ago ringing in his ears: "Just because we gave you the title of President does not mean you are in charge, Bub, and you'd better not forget it." JFK, liberal as he appeared at the time, was just not part of the Brotherhood, and its members knew he could not be converted.



Change

Statism is a religion, and, like all religions, it involves doctrines. The official story of the JFK assassination instantly became a doctrine that all loyal Americans would accept and honor. Never mind the obvious facts of the impossibility of a single assassin, it became the new litmus test for patriotism. And shutting down the rational, observant, independent mind is what every loyal subject of the State does on command; and especially at a time of crisis. (Remember the blind trust of the 9/11 reports?)

Ronald Reagan, maybe because of being caught up in the excitement of fulfilling his greatest acting role ever, did forget it during the first nine weeks he was in the White House and (maybe because of Nancy's Astrological influence) actually believed he was President of the United States. But then the Silent Brotherhood had a young nut named John Hinckley, Jr., remind him that he was not. But how many Americans know that John Hinckley, Sr., known as "Jack," was Vice President George H. W. Bush's close friend; and that he had another son, Scott Hinckley, who just happened to have a dinner engagement that same evening of March 30, 1981, with his close friend in Denver, Neil Bush? Thanks to the internet, you can still pull up the tape of NBC News anchor John Chancellor announcing this "ironic coincidence."

Compromise

Reagan finally realized that he was the popular figurehead placed there to please the Brotherhood and nobody else. And for the next eight years, that's exactly what he did. All things considered, it was more fun than dying in office.

Some others have forgotten in the past, and the saga of Bobby Kennedy is the replay we might look for next June. By that time, the club members will have decided if Trump has become "one of us" or still "one of them," whose plane must crash before the national convention.

Which pill?

If they are confident that he has joined their Brotherhood (or at least agreed to cooperate with their New World Order plans), it will be entertaining to watch the mad rush by the current crop of debate losers scrambling to be the Vice Presidential Republican candidate on the Trump ticket; as it may prove to be the more valuable position in the long run, should Trump become another establishment-defying problem.

And remember this: Trump will not be making the decision. Just as JFK was forced to accept LBJ as his VP and Reagan was told by David Rockefeller to bring on George Bush, you can bet your house and car that if Donald Trump is the Republican candidate, he will be backed up by one of the Brotherhood's own. It will be a four or eight-year policy insuring that Trump will stay in line.

And it always works, one way or the other.

Israeli forces storm Jerusalem's Al-Aqsa, injuring dozens

Most people outside of occupied Palestine have no idea what people there have endured since the 1948 invasion by Rothschild-financed Ashkenazis from Eastern Europe falsely calling themselves Semites.

middleeastmonitor.com

Dozens of Palestinians were injured on Sunday, September 13, when Israeli security forces stormed occupied East Jerusalem's flashpoint Al-Aqsa Mosque compound, attacking Muslim worshippers according to witnesses.

Witnesses told Anadolu Agency that Israeli forces had used tear gas, stun grenades and rubber bullets to disperse Muslim worshippers at the Al-Aqsa compound.

"At least 60 Special Forces troops and police stormed the mosque compound at dawn and sealed the Al-Qibali Mosque with iron chains," one eyewitness said.

Witnesses at the scene said Israeli security forces had fired tear gas and stun grenades inside the mosque itself.

Israel's "Defense" Forces

Omar al-Qiswani, Palestinian director of the mosque, told Anadolu Agency that he personally had been assaulted – along with several Muslim worshippers – while trying to keep Israeli troops from entering the mosque.

"Israeli forces went up to the roof of the Al-Qibali Mosque, smashing windows and spraying pepper gas inside the building," he said.

Earlier Sunday, scores of extremist Jewish settlers – led by Israeli Agriculture Minister Uri Ariel and backed by dozens of Israeli police and soldiers – also forced their way into the mosque compound.

"At least 40 Jewish settlers, accompanied by about 20 Israeli police and Special Forces troops, stormed the compound via the Al-Magharbeh Gate," Sheikh Azzam al-Khatib, director-general of Al-Aqsa affairs, told Anadolu Agency.

Israeli forces, he said, had used rubber bullets and tear gas to disperse Muslim worshippers who had gathered to protest the settlers' incursion.

"Four Palestinians were hurt by rubber bullets while at least 25 others suffered temporary asphyxia due to inhalation of tear gas," al-Khatib said.

Israeli forces also sealed the gates of the mosque and prevented women and men under 50 from entering it.

For Muslims, the Al-Aqsa Mosque complex represents the world's third holiest site. Jews, for their part, refer to the area as the "Temple Mount," claiming it was the site of two Jewish temples in ancient times.

Israel occupied East Jerusalem during the 1967 Middle East War. It later annexed the city in 1980, claiming it as the capital of the self-proclaimed Jewish State – a move never recognized by the international community.

In September 2000, a visit to Al-Aqsa by controversial Israeli politician Ariel Sharon sparked what became known as the "Second Intifada," a popular uprising against the Israeli occupation in which thousands of Palestinians were killed.

Israeli police interfere with a Palestinian woman who is protesting entry of Israel settlers into Al-Aqsa Mosque Compound near Al-Silsila gate, Jerusalem, September 13, 2015.

TFF writer Richard Noegel has composed in three languages the above-named email to Hungarian PM Victor Orban. This newspaper hopes you will spread his message online by signing and passing it on.

firstfreedom.net

"I want to post these three texts all over the world, inviting an international expression of support for Hungary," said Richard Noegel. So we're asking others to sign this one and set up their own petitions copying these English, French and German texts. Won't somebody who is fluent in Hungarian do likewise? Let's send such links to Hungarian embassies around the world!

The petition

We strongly support the Hungarian government's efforts to defend Hungarian territorial integrity and the dignity of the Hungarian State and to protect the lives, property, culture and future of the Hungarian people.

We urge the government and the people of Hungary to maintain their sovereignty against the illegitimate demands and threats of the European Union. The right to decide who may enter Hungary belongs to Budapest, not Brussels, Paris or Berlin. The right of self-defense is absolute for all Nations. The use of armed force to repulse a foreign invasion is therefore always right, proper and just.

Furthermore, we support Slovakia, the Czech Republic, Poland and all other sovereign States against the unjust demands of the self-serving, corrupt, vicious and venal bureaucrats of the European Union.

Nous nous déclarons en fort soutien des efforts du gouvernement hongrois pour défendre l'intégrité territoriale de la Hongrie et de la dignité de l'Etat hongrois et des efforts de ce gouvernement pour protéger la vie, la propriété, la culture, et de l'avenir du peuple hongrois.

Nous exhortons le gouvernement et le peuple de la Hongrie à défendre leur souveraineté contre les menaces et les exigences de l'Union européenne. Le droit de décider qui peut entrer en Hongrie appartient à Budapest, pas à Bruxelles, à Paris, ou à Berlin. La légitime défense est absolue, et donc quand il est nécessaire d'employer la force armée pour repousser une invasion étrangère, un tel déploiement est toujours juste et appropriée.

Par ailleurs, nous soutenons les pays de la Slovaquie, de la République tchèque, de la Pologne, et de tous les autres Etats souverains contre les exigences injustes des bureaucrates égoïstes, corrompus, vicieux, et véneaux de l'Union européenne. Soumission à l'Union européenne dans la crise actuelle n'est que l'abandon de la souveraineté nationale.

Wir unterstützen die Bemühungen der ungarischen Regierung zur ungarischen territorialen Integrität um die Würde des ungarischen Staates zu verteidigen und das Leben, Eigentum, Kultur und Zukunft des ungarischen Volkes zu schützen.

Wir fordern die Regierung und das Volk der Ungaren auf ihre Souveränität gegen die unrechtmäßigen Anforderungen und den Drohungen der Europäischen Union zu erhalten. Das Recht zu entscheiden wer Ungarn eintreten darf gehört Budapest, nicht Brüssel, Paris oder Berlin. Das Recht auf Selbstverteidigung ist absolut für alle Nationen. Die Anwendung von Waffengewalt, um eine fremde Invasion zurückzuschlagen ist daher immer richtig und Gerecht.

Darüber hinaus unterstützen wir die Slowakei, die Tschechische Republik, Polen, und alle anderen souveränen Staaten gegen die ungerechten Forderungen der selbstsüchtigen, korrupten und bestechlichen Beamten der Europäischen Union.

Ukraine's decision, says Putin

rt.com

President Vladimir Putin has said that the further development of the Ukrainian crisis depends on the patience of the Ukrainian people, who might one day decide to end the "bacchanalia" now performed by the Kiev regime.

"This does not depend on us, this depends on Ukraine itself and on the Ukrainian people – on how long the Ukrainian people will be able to put up with this bacchanalia," Putin said when asked by reporters if he had an opinion on future development of the events in Ukraine.

Putin added that in his view the Ukrainian people had reason to be discontented.

"I consider it an insult to the Ukrainian people that their country has been put under foreign management – all key positions in the government and now in regional administrations are occupied by foreigners. Is it possible that Ukraine is lacking civilized and honest people and qualified managers? I think there are such people in this country."

At the same time the president expressed confidence that eventually Ukraine will overcome the current political and economic crisis.

"I am sure that despite all difficulties of the current period the situation in Ukraine will also become normal and Ukraine will develop in a positive direction and move away from this disgraceful practice when a huge European country is being put under external management," he said, adding that one day the Ukrainian people will give a due estimation to the current state of events.

Russian President Vladimir Putin

President Petro Poroshenko and his allies started attracting foreign politicians to various posts in Ukraine soon after coming to power in 2014. These included Finance Minister Natalie Jaresko, Economic Minister Aivaras Abromavicius and Health Minister Alexander Kvitashvili – citizens of the United States, Lithuania and Georgia respectively. More foreigners were appointed on lower posts in these ministries. Another similar step was the appointment of former Georgian President Mikhail Saakashvili as the governor of the Odessa Region.

All foreign citizens who received government or regional posts from Poroshenko were also granted Ukrainian citizenship in order to comply with the law. He also proposed that the parliament alter the law and allow foreigners on top State positions without a change of citizenship, but this bill has not yet been passed.

In late 2014 Russian MP Aleksey Pushkov tweeted that by attracting foreigners to top State positions, President Poroshenko acknowledged that under his governance Ukraine had become a failed State.

Muzzies and Africans flooding Europe by the day

Angela Merkel lets in "refugees" incogman.net

The subversive Jews and Marxist traitors among our own kind are now flooding Europe with Dune Coon Semite Muslims from the Middle East, right along with hundreds of thousands of Black Africans still coming in from Libya.

Devilry

Folks, we're talking about Europe no longer being White lands at all. Right before our very eyes, the filthy NWO Jews are freely destroying our lands!

All week long the stinking Jew media in the U. S. ran that photo of a "poor little three-year-old boy drowned trying to 'make it to freedom' in a tiny rowboat with his family." You see how they jerk our emotional chains on a daily basis? Just watch the dinner time news on any channel. Ask yourself how come they never show any photos of dead little Palestinian children killed by Israeli bombs, like ever?

Don't you see what these devious Jews have done and are still doing to us? By using White people's very own good graces against ourselves, they set up all this peecee diversity stuff to confuse and undermine our race, so that we would eventually commit racial suicide.

East German Marxist and Globalist Jew tool, PM Angela Merkel, announced Germany and Austria would take in the hundreds of thousands of Muzzies invading Hungary. And you can bet that many of these will get spread around the rest of the Western World – unless we resist, including America!

Subversive Jews are doing this across the board – from abortion, faggotry and all kinds of sick crap perfectly suited to keep our numbers down, to promoting us to mate ourselves away with any other race. Don't you get it by now? It's been a long-running genocide program on us White people.

Everything the Nazis warned us about stinking Jewry is coming true!

The media are mixing and matching footage because they don't even care anymore. I saw a report on the so-called refugees in Hungary demonstrating to get on the trains to Germany and then ABC cut to shots of "yearning to be free" Africans crowded onto boats in the Mediterranean getting saved by the Italian navy, or whatever NWO Globalist big buck outfit trying to help them get to Europe.

Civilization destroyers

These Africans are not refugees from ISIS or Syrian president Assad (allied with Iran – hence mortal enemy of Israel who must be removed), but simply just lazy bastards trying to get to Europe to live the easy life on the public dole.

This lunacy has been going on for years now. International Jewry has been steadily brainwashing Whites with such diversity and multicultural crap for decades. You can turn on the TV and see it on display practically right away!

It's just incredible what idiot liberals and Globalist Jewry have done to Sweden with all this. Just think about that once beautiful, White Nordic Nation. This is being done to the U. S. right now. Diversity and PC have all been a huge dirty trick on White people. Plain and simple.

Demonic Jews have been behind non-White immigration into our lands from the start, like the devious-looking Interior Minister of Austria, Johanna Mikl-Leitner, above. Jewry has worked to destroy White demographics so we don't have enough political power to stop their Zionist NWO Globalist Agenda. And the hypocrites never allow non-Jew immigration into their sacred Israel – the cause of all this Mideast chaos to begin with!

Teenage ISIS recruiter caught, paraded through streets

rt.com

In the latest in a wave of Spain's Islamic State-related arrests, an 18-year-old Moroccan girl was paraded in handcuffs before crowds in Gandia, near Valencia. She stands accused of recruiting women to join, and was allegedly caught planning an escape to Syria.

Spanish police arrest an 18-year-old Moroccan woman suspected of recruiting other women via the internet to the jihadist group Islamic State (IS), in Gandia on September 5.

People at a busy central road stood watching as police and masked counter-terrorism units lined the streets. A female officer was also present as two officers led the burqa-clad teenager down the central street, according to the Daily Mail.

Other officers followed, carrying boxes full of evidence confiscated from the girl's apartment.

Worldwide intrigues

Her work allegedly consisted of making it easier for other young girls to make the decision to travel to Syria to join Islamic State (IS, formerly ISIS/ISIL). Every arrest of this kind carried out in Spain is a substantial breakthrough, given that over 100 Spanish citizens are thought to have joined the terrorist group already. As elsewhere in the E. U., there are persistent fears of jihadists returning from the field to cause terror on home soil.

According to the police statement, the girl "was making the last preparations for her journey" to Syria at the time of arrest. Another girl of similar age was detained in July, also on charges of recruiting women.

The teenager is Moroccan, but had been living in Spain for some time, police said. "She spread jihadist ideology on the internet, justifying terrorist acts and spreading videos that glorified executions of people," the statement added.

"She had focused her online activity on recruiting women to go and swell the ranks of Daesh" – the Arabic name for the IS.

Well organized

The young woman's arrest is the latest in a series of IS-related raids, which saw fourteen people arrested in the space of a few days by Spanish and Moroccan police, according to a statement from the Interior Ministry on August 25. All were charged with being part of a recruiting network. The arrests were carried out in the city of San Martin de la Vega, about 30 kilometers (18.6 miles) south of Madrid, and several major cities in Morocco.

Spanish police carry boxes of evidence as they leave the house of an 18-year-old Moroccan woman suspected of recruiting other women via the internet to the jihadist group Islamic State.

Out of Africa

The Spanish nation's memory is still plagued by the events of March 2004, when 191 people lost their lives in an explosion that devastated four commuter trains in Madrid. It was carried out by homegrown terrorists inspired by Al-Qaeda. Among the many convicted for that crime, 20 were Moroccan.

Hungarian prisoners rush to finish fence along border

hungarianambiance.com

Hungarian prisoners are hurrying to construct a massive fence on the country's border with Serbia, under the watchful eye of guards and police. The barrier is aimed at easing the flow of refugees entering the country.

The 3.5-meter-high fence is stretching 175 kilometers along the Hungary-Serbia border, replacing a much lower temporary barbed-wire fence which "refugees" were momentarily able to crawl under or climb over with ease.

Ruptly footage shows inmates installing barbed wire on a section of the fence that is already completed.

The prisoners are from the high-security Csillag prison in nearby Szeged, an officer supervising them told Reuters.

Some 350 inmates are working along the full length of the border, according to the Hungarian prison service. They are being supervised by 65 prison guards.

While prisoners have been involved in building the barrier since the beginning, the Hungarian prison service has not stated whether the number has increased since Budapest decided to speed up construction earlier last month.

"The number of prisoners working varies depending on the needs in the current phase of construction," a prison service spokeswoman said, as quoted by Reuters.

She added that the prisoners, who have gone through security checks, volunteered for the work. They are paid 33,000 forints ($117) a month, less a daily intermediary fee they must pay to the prison.

All prisoners in Hungary are obliged to work if they are able to do so. Most inmates do this by growing their own food, or working in prison bakeries, farms, or dairies. Some sew prison uniforms or manufacture beds and cell doors.

A gang of prison inmates walk along the Hungarian-Serbian border near a migrant collection point in Roszke, Hungary.

However, prisoners are not the only ones working to construct the fence. Hungary has increased the number of soldiers building the fence to 3,800, as the number of people crossing from Serbia hit a new record, AFP reported.

Rush to completion

Prime Minister Viktor Orban's chief of staff, Janos Lazar, had announced that the fence could be completed by October, a month ahead of schedule.

And, while that is surely good news for Orban's government, others are less keen on the barrier, which has led to tensions both inside and outside of Hungary.

Last month, Hungary's defense minister resigned because Orban was dissatisfied with the progress he had made in building the barrier.

Meanwhile, Hungary's fellow E. U. countries have criticized Budapest's actions.

Tear jerker

French Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius said in August that the fence did "not respect Europe's common values."

Hungarian Foreign Minister Peter Szijjarto hit back at his French counterpart by commenting: "Instead of shocking and groundless judgments, one should instead concentrate on finding common solutions for Europe." Fabius' criticism led to France's ambassador being summoned to Budapest last month.

Austria whines in Vienna has also criticized the fence, which resulted in Austria's ambassador also being summoned to Budapest.

The European Commission spoke out against the fence just one day after Hungary broke ground in July, with a spokesman saying the Commission does "not promote the use of fences" and "We have only recently taken down walls in Europe; we should not be putting them up."

Tougher action

Prime Minister Orban has warned that refugees crossing into the country illegally will be arrested. "From the 15th, Hungary cannot forgive illegal border-crossing," Orban said earlier last month. "Considering that we are facing a rebellion by illegal migrants, police have done their job in a remarkable way, without using force," Orban told reporters.

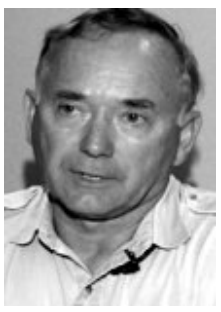
"They [refugees] have seized railway stations, refused to give fingerprints, failed to cooperate, and are unwilling to go to places where they would get food, water, accommodation and medical care… they have rebelled against Hungarian legal order."

More than 170,000 people have crossed into Hungary since the beginning of the year, most of whom hail from Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan. Most are using the country as a transit Nation, hoping to ultimately reach Germany – a country having opened its borders to new arrivals.

A total of 380,000 people are believed to have arrived in Europe this year alone, in what has become the worst "refugee" crisis since World War II.

PC in NC

By Lt. Colonel Donald Sullivan (Ret)
aloe910@aol.com



It would appear political correctness has gone amuck in the town of Surf City, NC. As I am vacationing in Surf City for our annual Sullivan family "Beach Week," keeping my head down and not paying any mind to the destruction of America for seven days, what to my wandering eyes should appear but a perfect example of much that's wrong with this country?: The wanton termination of an untainted, 35-year police career because a man spoke his mind, or at least wrote it, on Facebook. While exposing one's views on social media is not easy for a government employee, it is still a protected right in this country. However, if a White man tells the truth about the coloreds, he has to pay.

The "Black Lives Matter" website had posted calls for the indiscriminate killing of Whites in general and specifically White cops – nine hours before a White reporter and a White cameraman were murdered on live television in Virginia by a disgruntled former colored employee of the station who actually posted those murders on the internet. Then, a White sheriff's deputy was gunned down from behind a week later at a Chevron station in Harris County, Texas, by a colored gunman. Black Lives Matter traces its roots to the 2012 fatal shooting of 17-year-old Trayvon Martin in Florida, and gained national ground after 18-year-old Michael Brown was shot by a White police officer in Ferguson, Missouri, last summer.

With all this awareness of the threats to White people, especially cops, Surf City Police Chief Mike Halstad, White, did a little venting on Facebook September 3rd that upset certain victims of the "White privilege" syndrome at city hall.

After a September 15 closed session of the Surf City town council, Chief Halstad was given a choice by Mayor Zander Guy to either be fired or retire with a 60-day severance package.

Halstead responded that night on Facebook: "I want to thank you all for your support. I was forced to retire or be terminated. I had to beg for a 60 day severance to feed my family. That was the thanks I got from those I thought were family; I was thrown under the bus for expressing my 1st Amendment rights and speaking the truth… I want to thank all of the folks in Surf City for your support. It was my pleasure to serve you…"

The next morning following that closed session of the council, a group gathered outside the police department right across the street from city hall holding signs that said "Honk for Halstead" and "We Support Chief Halstead." Protester Brandy Cuff: "I was shocked and disgusted with our town council. No other words, just disgust." She said Halstead was unfairly forced to retire. "We have freedom of speech," she said. "Someone who spent 35 years of dedicated service can't post his opinion, or have an opinion about that? Someone who has to watch his fellow brothers in uniform be murdered, he can't have an opinion? It makes no sense."

Cuff also said it was unfair that there was no notice about Tuesday's emergency meeting, as many would have come out to support Halstead, had they known of the meeting. "They gave no notice to members of this community that have supported him for 17 years. They threw him under the bus and turned their backs on him."

"I wasn't ready for him to retire and I don't think he was either. He has a lot of great ideas that will make this community better," said Dorothy Royal, a resident and business owner in Surf City. "Halstead is a fantastic Chief. You can just pick up the phone and call him. He will talk to you, he will answer your questions. He has supported what we do in the community; we gave a gun safety camp this summer for kids that he was a sponsor of." As for the post, she said she agrees with it and doesn't think it is fair that it caused him to retire.

The group was out protesting again the following Friday. "There was no need to make a statement with his career," said Ricky Royal, a longtime Surf City resident who was among some 20 people holding signs and urging drivers to honk for Halstead. Royal added, "Halstead changed the way Surf City residents and their police interacted, taking it from a department that wore all black and intimidated citizens to one that earned their respect. They treated the public different and you could just see. The community actually came together."

In front of the group of supporters, Mike Halstead refused to apologize for the post on Facebook that led to his sudden retirement even as he clarified his message:

"Thank you everybody for being here. I wish to thank all of the residents for the tremendous love and support, and I would like to give a big thanks to LESMA, the Law Enforcement and Supporters for Media Accountability. To the thousands and thousands of emails, tweets and support, I am humbled and very, very grateful for the love and support from thousands of people all over the world, not just local and not just here in the U. S.

"I wish to clarify the meaning of thug. It is not a racial term. It is not defined as a race of people. Police have been using the term thug since the 60s and 70s. A thug is a person who steals what you have earned, kills, maims, rapes and robs. I do apologize if I offended anyone with the use of the term thug. I am not a racist person, I have never been a racist person. Anybody who knows me will tell you that. I am a God-fearing, loving man, and I am a Christian.

"I am willing to sit down with the town manager, councilman Curley and councilman Fowler to negotiate a proper retirement and retirement ceremony that every other law enforcement officer who retires in this nation is entitled to – and for the 35 years of service and my 17 years of service in this town without a blemish on my record. I have done nothing wrong, and I have been thrown out the door. I was treated like a dog, and I am just tired of it. Thank you."

Protester Sherry Snyder doesn't think the signs, signatures and honking will lead to any further action from the town council. "They're afraid," she said. "They're afraid of the NAACP, they're afraid of Black Lives Matter… We're not afraid."

The group planned a repeat performance, unlike those by the coloreds. There would be no burnings, beatings or looting during this one. They also promised to be at the next town council meeting on October 6.

When I questioned the mayor's office, police department and city hall, no one was willing to make any comment regarding the events of the past week in Surf City. A young police officer with whom I spoke was in tears and said she had been crying all day. "We all like Chief Halstad," she said. "He is a good man."

The NAACP's Deborah Maxwell said they plan to release a statement, although I question why the NAACP would even be involved. Nothing in the Chief's post had anything to do with race or hatred, just law and order. Where is the SPLC when groups like those mentioned by the Chief spout hate and threaten genocide, extermination of the White race?

I know Chief Halstad personally, a man of fine character, a competent individual respected by his subordinates, a supporter of our right to bear arms. He has obviously become a disruptive influence needing to be eliminated for the crime of telling the truth about the threat posed to all of us by militant coloreds. The Surf City council and mayor deserve no protecting. Political correctness will be their undoing.

Let every Nation secede from Zionist manipulation

The migrant chaos grew worse near Röszke in Hungary. The big mistake was in postponing fences too long instead of seeking this country's own refuge outside the European Union's mad ZOG.

hungarianambiance.com

Hundreds of migrants broke through police lines and started heading for the West on foot. They refused to cooperate with Hungarian authorities.

In the meantime, Jean-Claude Juncker, President of the European Commission in Strasbourg, called on E. U. member States to welcome 160 thousand migrants from Italy, Greece and Hungary to help "ease the migratory pressure" on those countries.

As Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán had said earlier, measures like that would have no impact unless the E. U. seals its borders prior to distributing any migrants among member States; first this would be necessary to stop the influx of migrants, as millions of people are on the move worldwide.

While the E. U.'s ZOG flunky leaders debate this refugee crisis the influx of illegal immigrants continues and no end in sight.

$500 billion Russia-China deals by 2035

rt.com

Energy deals between Russian oil major Rosneft and Chinese partners will be worth more than $500 billion in the next twenty years, according to Rosneft CEO Igor Sechin.

"Taking into account mutual trade and the existing contracts, the total value of cooperation of our company [with Chinese partners – Ed.] through 2035 will amount to $500 billion at current prices," Sechin said during the Eastern Economic Forum on September 4.

Moscow and Beijing are negotiating an increase in Russian oil supplies to China, said the chairman of the China National Petroleum Corporation (CNPC) Wang Yilin.

President and Chairman of the Board of JSC Rosneft Igor Sechin (R)

"China currently imports 15 million tons of crude oil from Russia through a pipeline. Now we are working on building a separate pipeline to increase the supply of crude oil to China," said Yilin.

He added that the two companies are cooperating and expressed hopes that the goal of increasing crude oil supplies to China will be reached as soon as possible.

Volatile market

Russia became Beijing's top crude supplier after China imported a record 3.92 million metric tons from Russia in May, which is equivalent to 927,000 barrels per day. Russia overtook Saudi Arabia as the biggest crude supplier to China.

Rosneft and CNPC signed a 25-year oil deal worth $270 billion at the St. Petersburg International Economic Forum two years ago. According to the agreement, the Russian company is expected to supply 360.3 million tons of crude to China.

A day earlier, during President Putin's visit to China, Rosneft inked agreements with China worth a potential $30 billion.

Northern Ireland bans GM crops to keep clean and green

sustainablepulse.com

Northern Ireland has joined Scotland, France, Greece and Latvia in announcing a full ban on GM crops under the new E. U. opt-out regulations. Environment Minister Mark H. Durkan has announced that he is prohibiting the cultivation of genetically modified (GM) crops in Northern Ireland.

Not worth it

Making the announcement at the launch of Environment Week, Durkan said: "I remain unconvinced of the advantages of GM crops, and I consider it prudent to prohibit their cultivation here for the foreseeable future.

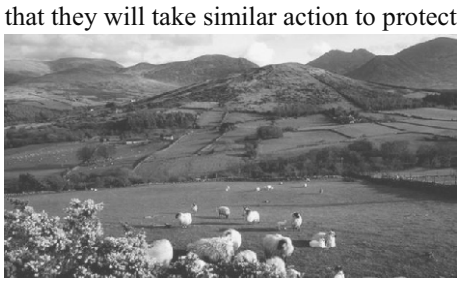
"The pattern of land use here and the relatively small size of many agricultural holdings creates potential difficulties if we were to seek to keep GM and non-GM crops separate. I consider that the costs of doing so could potentially be significant and, in many cases, totally impractical.

"Further, we are rightly proud of our natural environment and rich biodiversity. We are perceived internationally to have a clean and green image. I am concerned that the growing of GM crops, which I acknowledge is controversial, could potentially damage that image."

Northern Ireland has now joined France, which had already announced its decision along with Greece and Latvia in opting out from growing GM crops. Germany and Scotland have also made it clear that they will follow the same path.

Foods that are natural

German Agriculture Minister Christian Schmidt informed the German States in August of his intention to use a new E. U. law, passed in March, to ban the use of GM crops following the Scottish Government's announcement earlier in the same month that they will take similar action to protect Scotland's clean, green status.



The German announcement also came as Professor Carlo Leifert, who teaches Ecological Agriculture at Newcastle University, said that he strongly believes the Scottish Government ban on GM crops is right and that "there are likely to be significant commercial benefits from Scotland being clearly recognized as a GM-free region."

Slovakia opposes quotas

Bratislava (AFP) – Slovakia's Prime Minister Robert Fico said on September 21 that his government would oppose E. U. plans for compulsory migrant quotas at an emergency meeting in Brussels.

"If quotas are approved, we will take a substantial and clear position. We will do everything we can to convince Europe that quotas are nonsense," he had said in a television broadcast the previous day.

Wants none of it

He made clear that Interior Minister Robert Kalinak would aim to block the European Commission's plan involving a quota system to distribute 160,000 refugees across the entire 28-member European Union.

Fico said that imposing quotas – a move also opposed by the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland – would be a violation of the basic decision-making rules of the European Union.

Luring "refugees" aboard a sinking ship

as the European powers begin deciding whether or not to intervene further in Syria alongside the U. S., a sudden and convenient deluge of refugees has flooded Europe, almost as if on cue. Scenes like that out of a movie showed hordes of tattered refugees herded along various borders as they apparently came out of what the Western media have portrayed as a puff of smoke at Europe's gates.

In reality, they did not appear out of a puff of smoke. They appeared in Turkey, a NATO member since the 1950s and one of America's closest regional allies. Turkey is currently hosting the U. S. military including special forces and the CIA who have, together with the Turkish military and its intelligence agencies, been conducting a proxy war on neighboring Syria since 2011.

Turkey has suspiciously maintained a very enthusiastic "open door" policy for refugees, spending inexplicable sums of money and political capital accommodating them. The Brookings Institution – one of the chief policy think tanks helping engineer the proxy war with Syria – reported in its July 2015 "Order out of Chaos" article, "What Turkey's open-door policy means for Syrian refugees," that:

> Turkey is now the world's largest recipient of refugees. Since October 2013, the number of Syrian refugees has increased more than threefold and now numbers almost two million registered refugees.

Brookings also reports that:

> The cost has been high to Turkey. Government officials are quick to point out that they have spent over $6 billion on the refugees and complain about the lack of international support.

Brooking details the vast efforts Turkey is undertaking in coordination with Western NGOs to manage the refugees. There is little way that these refugees could suddenly "disappear" and end up in Europe without the Turkish government and, more importantly, European governments either knowing about it or being directly involved.

Pawns of war

Clearly Turkey lacks any altruistic motivation behind its refugee policy. Turkey is one of the chief facilitators of terrorists operating in Syria, and a primary collaborator in NATO's proxy war against its neighbor. Turkey has allowed literally hundreds of supply trucks a day to cross its borders uninhibited and destined for ISIS territory. Turkey has also been tasked throughout various U. S. policy papers with establishing a "buffer zone" or "safe haven" to move these refugees into, as well as for establishing a Syrian-based stronghold for NATO's terrorist proxies to launch military operations from. Likely, the refugees were to serve as the initial population of whatever proxy State NATO planned to create with territory it seized and established no-fly-zones over in northern Syria.

Now it appears many of these refugees are instead being rerouted to Europe.

However, not all of those refugees flooding into Europe from Turkey are even from the Syrian conflict. Many are being trafficked first to Turkey from other theaters of NATO operations, including Afghanistan and Pakistan as well as Iraq.

It appears that Turkey is serving as a central transit point, not just for terrorists it is feeding into the Syrian conflict, but also for collecting refugees from across MENA and Central Asia, before allowing them to proceed in vast numbers into Europe.

Some reports even indicate that the refugees are receiving direct assistance from the Turkish government itself. The International New York Times' Greek Kathimerini paper, in an article titled, "Refugee flow linked to Turkish policy shift," claims (emphasis added):

> A sharp increase in the influx of migrants and refugees, mostly from Syria, into Greece is due in part to a shift in Turkey's geopolitical tactics, according to diplomatic sources. These officials link the wave of migrants into the eastern Aegean to political pressures in neighboring Turkey, which is bracing for snap elections in November, and to a recent decision by Ankara to join the U. S. in bombing Islamic State targets in Syria. The analyses of several officials indicate that the influx from neighboring Turkey is taking place as Turkish officials look the other way or actively promote the exodus.

Catastrophes that are meant to look "sudden" and "unexpected" as well as "unstoppable" but are, in fact, allowed to unfold within an operational theater completely controlled by the U. S. and NATO constitutes instead a conspiracy – pitting desperate and/or exploited refugees intentionally sent out of Turkey and into Europe, against a manipulated, fearful, and ill-informed Western public.

Also brought into sharp focus are the string of staged attacks allowed to unfold across Europe – allegedly the work of "ISIS." In every case without exception, the perpetrators had been well known to Western intelligence agencies, including the shooters involved in the Paris "Charlie Hebdo massacre." In that incident, all members involved were tracked by French security agencies for nearly ten years. At least one member was even imprisoned, had traveled afterward to collude with Al Qaeda abroad, and returned to Europe, all while under surveillance. "Coincidentally," for the six months needed to plan and carry out their final act, French security agencies stopped monitoring the group, claiming a lack of resources to do so.

Those familiar with NATO's Cold War Gladio program can see clearly that the attacks were staged to play into a strategy of tension used to produce fear domestically and build up support for wars abroad.

The recent refugee crisis is being used for precisely this same purpose. In fact, while a false debate is being managed by the Western media and Western political figures to either unconditionally accept the refugees or unconditionally reject them, the only singular narrative both sides are being made to agree on is that instability across MENA is to blame and more bombing is the answer.

Selling acceptance

Debates over increased direct military intervention in Syria are now almost entirely predicated not on supporting "freedom fighters," stopping "WMDs" or fighting "ISIS," but instead on how military intervention can help solve the "refugee crisis."

The main narratives undulating media headlines dismiss both the West's role in devastating the MENA region as well as acknowledging the fact that the "refugee crisis" is emanating primarily from within NATO's borders, not from beyond them. The refugees are pawns, intentionally moved across the game board to illicit a predictable reaction from their hopelessly unskilled opponents – the public. While the social engineers are engaged in a game of three-dimensional chess, the Western public appears to be infantilely eating their checkers.

Considering this unfortunate reality, whatever justifications the West is able to predicate upon the refugee crisis will have to be confronted again by Syria and its allies alone – with the Western public hopelessly defenseless against a conspiracy they have been made accomplices of.

Social engineering vs. the inevitable rot of empire

A refugee crisis was inevitable, regardless of the timing and magnitude of any given deluge that may have been created or manipulated by the West. Destroying the planet in pursuit of empire, pillaging Nations and hauling away the wealth of the world inevitably leads to endless streams of victims following their stolen wealth back to the thieves' den. As an empire expands and the list of its victims expands with it, the number of those an empire is able to fully assimilate versus those who will inevitable overwhelm it eventually tips the balance against the empire's favor.

Such was the fate of the Roman Empire, which over the course of its decline had its institutions overwhelmed by peoples it had conquered faster than it could assimilate them.

Burning bridges

For the West, it has chosen confrontation rather than cooperation. It has closed economic ties with Russia, alienated China and wages ceaseless war across the MENA region and Central Asia. It pursues a now exposed campaign of divide and conquer across Southeast Asia augmented with terrorism and political subversion all while neglecting every virtue that ever made it a respected global power to begin with.

How much of the most recent refugee crisis is social engineering versus simply the inevitable rot of empire is difficult to tell – though the fact that social engineers would be tempted to use a vast number of refugees created by their own foreign policy indicates that their ploy in and of itself is indicative of immense, irreversible geopolitical rot.

Media "link" Donald Trump to The Political Cesspool

By James Edwards
thepoliticalcesspool.org

The media are wetting themselves with hysterical reaction to Donald Trump's surging candidacy. They must feel absolutely impotent to find that, after spending decades attempting to brainwash people with a constant inundation of unnatural ideas, that their best efforts have resulted in a colossal failure.

Trump has risen to the top of the GOP polls for simply stating that he will enforce our immigration laws and by showing he is a man who won't cower to political correctness. By throwing out just a little bit of red meat to the starving base of the Republican Party he has firmly positioned himself as the front runner.

As the media watch their grip slipping away they have become desperate to paint Trump as a "racist." It's the same old, worn out card they always play. They are so desperate, in fact, that they're even using a few positive things that I said about Trump in hopes that it will force him to back down.

> Let me offer some friendly advice to the Republican Party that I learned firsthand as a Muslim American: You don't want to be defined by your most extreme members. And here's a little more advice. The longer the GOP leadership remains silent as Donald Trump garners increasing support from White supremacist organizations, the more likely the GOP will become known as the party of racists…
> For example, just last week David Duke, the former Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux, publicly praised Trump as the best Republican candidate in the 2016 field because he "understands the real sentiment of America." Duke applauded Trump's views on immigration that call for mass deportation of families, saying that Trump is "speaking out on this greatest immediate threat to the American people."
> Trump's tepid response to Duke's glowing praise was troubling to say the least: "I certainly wouldn't want his endorsement. I don't need anyone's endorsement." When pressed by a reporter to repudiate Duke, Trump responded, "Sure, I would if that would make you feel better"…
> Duke, however, is far from the only person tied to White supremacist or hate groups publicly endorsing Trump. Last week, White nationalist radio host James Edwards, a man who has warned against interracial marriage, called slavery "the greatest thing that ever happened to" Blacks, and featured a "roster of White supremacists" on his show, publicly endorsed Trump…
> Now just imagine the media coverage if RNC chair Reince Priebus held a press conference, along with some of the GOP leadership in the House and Senate, to denounce the White nationalist groups supporting Trump. It would make headlines nationwide and send a clear message to all.
> Isn't it time for the GOP leaders to make it clear where they stand on White supremacists supporting their party's front-runner for the presidential nomination? I, for one, very much look forward to hearing what they have to say on this issue.

Am I supposed to be concerned about being denounced by a pathetic individual like Reince Priebus? Well, I'm not.

I was denounced on the record by members of the United States Congress earlier this year and consider that to be one of the greatest achievements of my career. I'd rather enjoy being denounced by the entire Republican establishment. In fact, I'll even lob the first volley and officially denounce them.

Frankly, I couldn't care less if Donald Trump himself denounced me and all my friends. He can denounce me until the cows come home so long as he follows through on his pledge to build a wall and deport the illegal aliens. That's all that matters.

And, about that "Slavery is the greatest thing to ever happen to Blacks" quote. I guess this is where lesser men would apologize and pretend they meant something else?

Not me. I meant it and stand by it. Of course, it was nice of the writer to cherry pick a quote and leave the context out, but it is clear that what I way saying is that Blacks in America enjoy a better standard of living than their kinsmen in Africa. He also conveniently omits the fact that I was quoting a Jamaican writer.

Pat Buchanan has written the exact same thing in his nationally syndicated column:

> America has been the best country on earth for Black folks. It was here that 600,000 Black people, brought from Africa in slave ships, grew into a community of 40 million, were introduced to Christian salvation, and reached the greatest levels of freedom and prosperity Blacks have ever known.
> [N]o people anywhere has done more to lift up Blacks than White Americans. Untold trillions have been spent since the '60s on welfare, food stamps, rent supplements, Section 8 housing, Pell grants, student loans, legal services, Medicaid, Earned Income Tax Credits and poverty programs designed to bring the African-American community into the mainstream.

Full disclosure

I digress.

Here's an excerpt from another major article:

> White nationalist media figures are backing Donald Trump's presidential campaign and celebrating his stance on immigration. They have hailed Trump as "doing the Lord's work," someone who "represents our interests," "the best of the lot," and the "last hope for a president who would be good for White people"…
> White Nationalist Radio Host James Edwards Says He's Backing Trump Now…
> Edwards: Trump Candidacy Shows "People Agree With Us On The Issues … I'm In With Trump For Right Now." During his August 22 radio program, Edwards said he's buying into Trump's candidacy. He stated of Trump's campaign and supporters: "Folks, these are our people. I have said for years, fundamentally, people agree with us on the issues that bring this show to life, and we're seeing that now in a very tangible way." Edwards added that while he doesn't agree with Trump on everything, "I'm in with Trump for right now."

Now we come to the part where I usually remind readers that never once in ten years of broadcasting have I referred to myself as a "White nationalist." One reason is because hack journalists like this seem incapable of making the elementary distinction between the words "nationalist" and "supremacist." It's as if they don't want to. But it doesn't matter anymore because people are now clearly seeing through the silly pejoratives. For what it's worth, I identify as a Southern Conservative.

A few other reporters emailed me last week for comment but I didn't waste my time by granting them an interview. I don't have patience for nonsense from hypocrites. Who wants to bet that the effeminate creeps who wrote these articles live in majority-White neighborhoods?

EDITOR'S NOTE

"Divided we stand" reads CNN's caption when cherry-picking words from the mouth of a James Edwards or Pat Buchanan. They oughta know. Back in 1992 the Communist News Networks just couldn't wait for such a slowpoke at jump-starting the New World Order as George H. W. Bush, so they split the "Conservative" vote by introducing Texas billionaire Ross Perot's "Reform" party, thus dividing and conquering for their flunky Bill Clinton. In 1996 a real Conservative, Pat Buchanan, bowed out at the San Diego Republican Convention giving Slick another four years, as lackluster Bob Dole was a pushover. And now, just when you thought it wasn't safe to go to the polls anymore, billionaire Don Trump promises (but doesn't use the J-word) that if you'll "vote" one more time, he will fix what ails. Once the Golden Dawn party threatened to unseat those who control CNN and its likes in the cradle of Democracy, Greece fell for "Sexy" Alexi Tsipras, who outbid Golden Dawn; he would lose the banksters more quickly. But, when elected, that shill handed them his country on a platter. Let's unmask this false god of Democracy, pray on our knees for needed guidance, and perform what such wisdom dictates.

How can six million survivors be wrong?

Did little Moshe really die six times before he survived?

globalfire.tv

On April 27, 1995, the elite of German society, wearing Jewish mourning hats, assembled together in Belsen to mourn, weep and wail. These politically correct elite stood shoulder to shoulder with their Jewish holocaust comrades in an affected display of unity to the world, as the entire world media captured these tender moments for posterity. The act of such caring, worthy of a Holowood Oscar, was to mourn those "mass gassings" in the former Belsen "extermination" camp. However, Belsen had no gas chambers and was far from being an extermination camp. Belsen was a camp for prominent, influential Jews for future exchange. But, no matter, this is not important, for the SHOA must go on.

German elite mourn the "mass gassings" in the former Belsen "extermination" camp, albeit Belsen had no gas chambers.

Please research and learn what Belsen was all about. Be sure to read also the story of little Moshe, whose Belsen gas chamber ordeal lasted six rounds before he survived.

Belsen had no gas chambers.

Jewish Chronicle, London
Friday, November 6, 1998

"IF ONE WERE to choose one word guaranteed, for the British, to encapsulate the horrors of the Holocaust, it would be Belsen."

So, it was the newsreels of the liberation of Belsen that brought home to the British public the existence of gas chambers and the Nazi extermination camps and the reality of Hitler's "Final Solution."

Belsen had no gas chambers and was not an extermination camp.

If anything, it had been one of the less brutalized camps, since one of its purposes had been to hold some prominent Jews for exchange with interned Germans.

It was only as the flood of inmates from camps in Poland poured into Belsen in the last months of the war that it took on its familiar, hellish character. Nor was Belsen linked at the time with the specifically Jewish tragedy, despite the fact that Jews then comprised the majority of the inmates at the liberation.

But little Moshe was gassed at Belsen six times before he survived!

Surviving the horror

Author recounts experiences in Nazi concentration camp

ST. LAURENT – As an 11 year-old boy held captive at the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp during World War II, Moshe Peer was sent to the gas chamber at least six times. Each time he survived, watching with horrors as many of the women and children gassed with him collapsed and died. To this day, Peer doesn't know how he was able to survive. "Maybe children resist better, I don't know," he said in an interview last week.

Now 60, Peer has spent the last 19 years writing a first-person account of the horror he witnessed at Bergen Belsen. On Sunday, he spoke to about 300 young adults at the Petah Tikva Sephardic Congregation in St. Laurent about his book and his experience as a Holocaust survivor.

The gathering was part of the synagogue's Shabbaton 93, which brought together young adults from across North America for a cultural and social experience.

Called Inoubliable Bergen-Belsen (Unforgettable Bergen-Belsen), Peer wrote the book to make the reader feel like a witness at the scene. But he admits he can never recreate for anyone the living hell he experienced. "The conditions in the camp is indescribable," Peer said. "You can't bring home the horror."

In 1942, at age 9, Peer and his younger brother and sister were arrested by police in their homeland of France. His mother was sent to Auschwitz and never returned.

Peer and his siblings were sent to Bergen-Belsen two years later. He recalls the separation from his parents as excruciating. But surviving the horrors of the camp quickly became a priority.

Similarities between Gaza today and Dixie in 1865

Making Gaza livable again: lift the blockade, allow reconstruction materials in, prevent new military ops.

rt.com

The situation in Gaza is very bleak today and if the trend of destruction and debilitated infrastructure continue, living conditions there will be subhuman in about five years, declares Mahmoud Elkhafif, UNCTAD's special coordinator for assistance to the Palestinian people.

A Palestinian woman walks past the remains of a house that witnesses said was destroyed by Israeli shelling during a 50-day war last summer, in Khan Younis in the southern Gaza Strip.

Trends Palestinian statehood

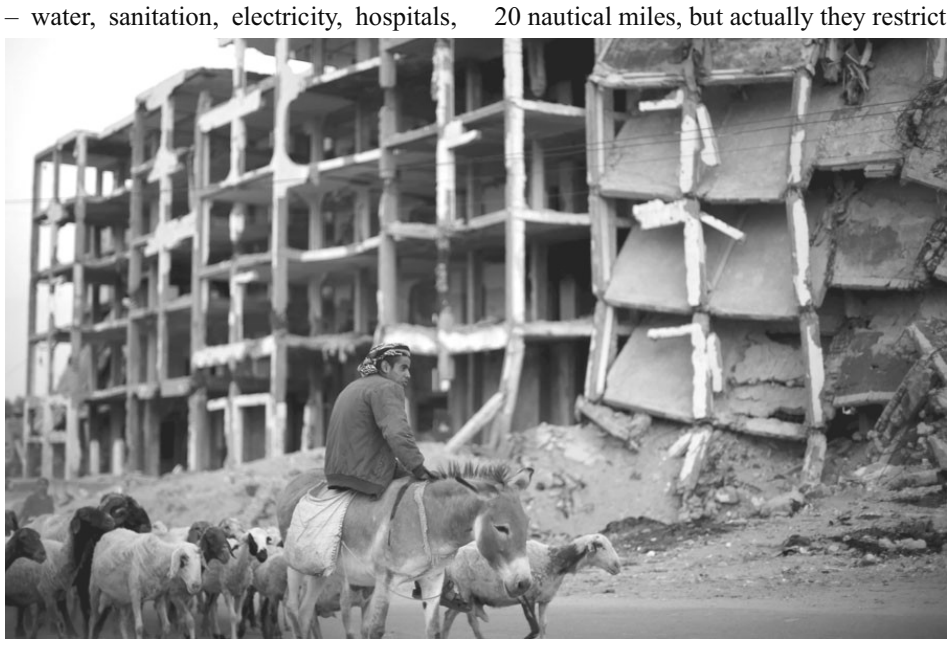
Wars and destruction could soon make Gaza uninhabitable if nothing is done to reverse the consequences of conflict. The U. N. is warning that Gaza's economy is close to being unviable and that may lead to more conflict, poverty and unemployment. The U. N. report also highlights a number of other issues such as increased population density, a shortage of electricity and most alarmingly a shortage of clean water.

RT: What are the most important factors which make life in Gaza unbearable?

Mahmoud Elkhafif: In the Gaza Strip the most important factor actually is that Gaza, where 1.8 million human beings live, is under an almost complete economic siege since 2007, meaning that only essential humanitarian supplies are allowed in. [Also], in the last six years Gaza experienced three major full scale military operations which led to major destruction of the infrastructure – water, sanitation, electricity, hospitals, schools and housing. We have about 20,000 housing units completely damaged; 50,000 are partially damaged. Almost all the industry, all the small workshops and factories are not operating anymore. So the situation in Gaza is very bleak; nothing serious in terms of reconstructing and rehabilitating Gaza so that Gaza is able to produce again – nothing has been done. What we are saying is that if these trends continue to be, the situation will get worse and worse to the extent that the living conditions will be more or less subhuman conditions.

RT: What about basic supplies of food and water?

ME: I don't have exact figures and that's not the intention or the task of our report, but we indicated that 95 percent of Gaza's drinkable water is not drinkable anymore. The food of course is in short supply. The fishing industry [has been] under siege for a long time, because the Israeli authorities are not allowing Palestinian fishermen to fish in the normal 20 nautical miles, but actually they restrict them to about three miles only. I think they have increased [that limit] now maybe to five miles or so. And even so the fishing harvest is very small because the actual sewage system is being injected into the sea and that basically spoils the sea water and fish get sick or go away from this neighborhood.



A Palestinian shepherd rides a donkey as he herds livestock past residential buildings, that witnesses said were heavily damaged by Israeli shelling during a 50-day war last summer, in Beit Lahiya town in the northern Gaza Strip.

Limited areas for farming

Just because of the war agriculture lost about half a billion dollars of its GDP or value added. Palestinian farmers in Gaza are not allowed to farm about one kilometer away from the border with Israel – so you can imagine how much of the agricultural area which can be cultivated has been reduced or contracted. So food is in short supply and the indication about that is basically the food insecurity, about 72 percent of Palestinian households in Gaza are food insecure. It means that the level of food, the food intake is not enough and even the quality of the food intake is not enough.

RT: How many people have managed to escape the area?

ME: I have no figures about that, but I know about the Palestinians – they don't like to leave their homes. But like any human beings when you live under such conditions or if anybody is threatened to die, he will try to flee to protect him and his family. There is no kind of statistics that indicates that Palestinians want to leave Gaza, we didn't mean that by our heading. What we are saying is that if these trends of destruction and debilitated infrastructure continue, Gaza living conditions will be subhuman in about five years. As a matter of fact, this heading goes back to a report written by our colleague back in 2012 and that was the assessment before the war. So what we are saying in our report – imagine if that was a case in 2012, imagine what would be the case after what happened in 2014 after… after half a million human beings have been displaced…

RT: What should be done in the first place to make the Gaza area livable again?

ME: I think what should be done is basically reverse or remedy what has been done. Number one – lifting the blockade, number two – allowing the reconstruction material to move into Gaza and number three – not to go into another war or a full scale military operation. So if lifting the blockade is one thing, the second point would be allowing reconstruction material. In this regard what we are saying is that there is a treaty called Movement and Access Agreement which was signed by the Palestinian side and the Israeli side in 2005. What UNCTAD is recommending is reactivate, make this agreement operational. The agreement calls mainly for three points. Number one – reconnect Gaza with the West Bank as one economy, reconnect Gaza with the rest of the world. Number two – to construct Gaza's sea port; number three – start negotiating on the construction and establishment of Gaza airport. This is the only way to help Gaza get out of it.

Looking ahead

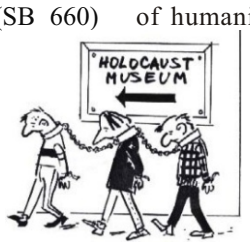
RT: How much time will it take to make the Gaza area livable again?

ME: It shouldn't take long, but the most important thing is – once you lift the blockade, the people will have hope… The Palestinian…people are able to feed themselves if given the opportunity, if they are not put under such conditions [as they are now]. The Palestinian people are very dynamic… so the most important thing is to give people some hope and allow them to go back and to reconstruct, rehabilitate their own lives.

Florida's holocaust mandate

flholocausteducationtaskforce.org

In 1994, the Florida Legislature passed the Holocaust Education Bill (SB 660) which amends Section 233.061 of the Florida Statutes (Chapter 94-14, Laws of Florida) relating to required instruction. The new law requires all school districts to incorporate lessons on the Holocaust as part of public school instruction. The statute reads:



"Florida Statute 1003.42(f)

"The history of the Holocaust (1933-1945), the systematic planned annihilation of European Jews and other groups by Nazi Germany, a watershed event in the history of humanity, to be taught in a manner that leads to an investigation of human behavior, an understanding of the ramifications of prejudice, racism, and stereotyping, and an examination of what it means to be a responsible and respectful person, for the purposes of encouraging tolerance of diversity in a pluralistic society and for nurturing and protecting democratic values and institutions."

Media manipulated appearances serve only to deceive

As White birthrates again surge, the demographic doomsayers have started feeling somewhat let down.

By Bill White
firstfreedom.net

Americans, we hear, find themselves swamped by non-White birthrates; Whites may soon be a minority.

Or maybe not.

Now that the "millennial" generation is hitting its mid-20s, the time that was going to introduce our genocide is showing that, yes, White people still know how to have children.

Millennials are people born between 1980 and 2000, so named because the Jews doing the demographics need to categorize people in hopes of dividing and turning them against each other. And, since 1992, demographers have been noticing that these millennials – then 12 years old – have been mostly having non-White children outside of marriage and that these children are mostly being born to parents without college degrees. From this, demographers have predicted that such poorly educated non-Whites will soon swamp the country. Further, the U. S. Census Bureau, which no longer counts people but just publishes make-believe estimates, has used these figures to justify its overcounting of non-Whites.

But, as with most of the lies America lives under, no one ever sat down and thought out whether this illusionary narrative made any sense.

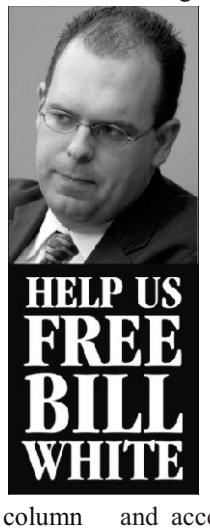
For instance, how many Whites with a future involving marriage and college have children at the age of 12?

Rebirth of a Nation

Now that millennials are reaching their mid-twenties, they are – surprise, surprise – completing college, getting married and having children. Further, those who are so doing are disproportionately White. Based on this completely unexpected happening, demographers are now having to alter their models. Soon 77% of those born to the millennial generation will be born to married couples, and most will be born to married couples with college degrees.

Yet none will be born to homosexual couples who cannot have natural children. "We've seen marked declines in birth rates among working-class, poor, younger, less educated women," Brad Wilcox, Director of the National Marriage Project at the University of Virginia, told the media.

Further, since the economic collapse of 2008, the birthrate among non-Whites has sharply declined while it has been steadily rising among White married couples since 2010.



Many who were betting on the doom of the White race – like the leaders of all American political parties – will be disappointed. In August, for instance, Karl Rove, a Judæo-occult pawn who plays chess master for the Republicans, predicted in a Wall Street Journal column that the percentage of White voters in the United States would decline 2% by each and every election until there are no White people left to vote. To support this, Rove cited bogus demographic models and the illegal immigration rate: nonsense, because illegal immigrants are not citizens and do not vote. The American Latino population including illegals boomed until 2008, but the non-White portion of U. S. citizens who can vote has grown much more slowly.

Ironically, White race pimps will likely be just as disappointed by this change in demographics as the Judæo-occultists who want White people exterminated.

One's own interests

The fact is that, regardless of demographics, White people still have the right to live in a White Nation. Furthermore, despite the demands of Jewish-financed Black mobs, White people do not owe anybody outside of their own anything.

To transform societies, the Jews and their fellow sorcerers make certain unwanted results appear inevitable, and then they demand that everyone tolerate and accept that. Meanwhile, the Judæo-occultists neither tolerate nor accept any idea that they didn't come up with. As long as Whites allow this magical manipulation to continue, no change in reality will help us. But, once we snap out of this trance, realizing we're not doomed, and purge the sleeping draught from our cultural system, change will happen overnight.

Color Revolution 2.0 in Lebanon: from trash to rubble?

By Tony Cartalucci
journal-neo.org

"Spontaneous." "Genuine." "Defiant." The U. S. State Department's marketeers have used these labels to differentiate its latest wave of global "color revolutions" from the now tired, ineffective and familiar formulas used everywhere from the U. S.-engineered "Arab Spring," to the Euromaidan in Ukraine, to Bersih 4.0 in Malaysia.

The latest target is Lebanon, where protests have begun in the streets of the capital, Beirut. Branded the "YouStink!" marches, the alleged provocation was dysfunctional municipal garbage collection services. However, very predictably, the protests have shifted quickly from what could have been perceived as legitimate demands to outright calls for regime change.

Color Revolutions 2.0

Just recently in Armenia, the U. S. had conducted what appeared to be a test run of its new and improved "color revolution" system of regime change. It attempted to create a movement with little if any initial political affiliation and with deeply hidden ties between protest organizers and their U. S. State Department affiliations. The so-called "Electric Yerevan" protests, whose alleged grievances were rising electric bills, ultimately spent so much time trying to convince Armenians and people around the world that they weren't a U. S.-backed mob, they never succeeded in building up sufficient momentum to move on to the next step.

The trick was to first use rising electrical costs as a pretext to stage the protests, then quickly swing them around to demand a change in government. Likely, provocations and violence were planned for later stages, as well as opportunities for America's client opposition parties to take over and swell the ranks of street mobs with their supporters.

In Armenia, America's next generation of color revolutions failed.

In Beirut, however, it seems that the protests have made it at least to the point where the alleged pretext – piles of garbage – have now been replaced with demands for regime change.

Despite the 2005 so-called "Cedar Revolution" being exposed as entirely U. S.-engineered, paving the way for the expulsion of Syrian troops from Lebanon and an Israeli attack on the country the following year, many even in the alternative press have been taken in by what should be an obvious, albeit more carefully concealed, follow-up to 2005's events.

Spot them, follow the money

Transcending emotional appraisals of street mobs and reciting the alleged demands and motivations of the protesters themselves, protests are like anything else in the real world – they require leaders, organization, money, logistics, and the infrastructure to function. The "YouStink!" protest is no different. Trawling through the Western media's reports, several names are repeatedly mentioned as "organizers" and "leaders."

They include Asaad Thebian, an alumnus of the U. S. State Department's Middle East Partnership Initiative (MEPI). In 2014, Thebian would be standing in front of American flags and behind a podium with the U. S. State Department's seal affixed to it at a MEPI event, berating the Lebanese government. Now in 2015, he is attempting to overthrow it. Thebian would be quoted by Al Jazeera claiming:

> "We started as dozens of protesters and now we're thousands," Asaad Thebian, an activist with the You Stink! campaign, said during Friday's press conference. "We are demanding parliamentary elections."

The International Business Times would expand on what is clearly taking shape as the true agenda behind the protests. In their article, "'You Stink' Demonstrators In Beirut Issue 72-Hour Ultimatum, Vow To Spread Protests In Lebanon Nationwide," they would report that:

> In Beirut's symbolic Martyrs' Square recently, protesters have chanted, "The people want the downfall of the government" and "Revolution!" Some have drawn parallels between these rallies and the demonstrations that swept many Arab countries in 2011 and 2012, which led to the toppling of a number of regimes in the Middle East and North Africa.

Joining Thebian is Michel Elefteriades who helped co-organize the U. S.-backed mobs in Lebanon in 2005's "Cedar Revolution" and worked for years to expel Syrian troops from Lebanon. The International Business Times would conduct a lengthy interview with him in their report, "Lebanon You Stink protests: We are not Egypt, claims activist Michel Elefteriades." The report would quote Elefteriades as saying:

> "This is not similar to what happened in Egypt or elsewhere where people were manipulated, or without greater political awareness," Elefteriades exclusively told IBTimes UK from Beirut.

Elefteriades, in addition to claiming somehow their protest is different, would also attempt to assuage fears of a power vacuum forming if the current government was ousted:

> "There is a leadership that is ready to take over and there will not be a vacuum," Elefteriades explained. "There are many people, with great capacities, but that are still suffocated by this political elite and this new class will never be able to lead this country because those in place don't want to give them space. So, as soon as that old political class will have left, there will be the emergence of a new political class, from one day to the next."

There is also Lucien Bourjeily, a theater artist who in 2012 organized a London showing of "66 Minutes in Damascus." The London Guardian would review his play, in which the audience was "immersed" in the experience of being a "political prisoner" of the "crumbling Assad regime" in Syria.

Also telling is Walid Jumblatt's support of the mobs. In a Lebanese National News Agency report titled, "Jumblatt urges You Stink organizers to halt political manipulation of their movement," it was stated that:

> MP Walid Jumblatt tweeted on Sunday that yesterday's protest in Down Town Beirut truly expressed the pains suffered by the Lebanese. He compelled those responsible for You Stink movement not to allow political parties to take advantage of this "spontaneous movement" and abort it prematurely. He also urged the movement's organizers to study the proper mechanism to execute their demands.

Jumblatt's calls are similar to those made by U. S.-proxy political opposition parties in Armenia who insisted the protests were "spontaneous" and urged the clearly politically motivated movement to remain "unpolitical." An added touch to Lebanon's current round of protests was the protesters rejecting Jumblatt's support for the movement. It is likely that Jumblatt and others will end up literally on stage leading protests if they escalate long enough before sectarian violence is finally triggered.

Jumblatt's role is significant and his name should be familiar to those following events in the Middle East. It was Jumblatt who conspired with the then U. S. Vice President Dick Cheney on how best to undermine neighboring Syria in the years leading up to the 2011 war. Revealed in Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Seymour Hersh's 2007 report "The Redirection: Is the Administration's new policy benefiting our enemies in the war on terrorism?" Jumblatt suggested using the Syrian Muslim Brotherhood, a scheme that even at the time had already gotten underway.

Hersh would report:

> Jumblatt then told me that he had met with Vice-President Cheney in Washington last fall to discuss, among other issues, the possibility of undermining Assad. He and his colleagues advised Cheney that, if the United States does try to move against Syria, members of the Syrian Muslim Brotherhood would be "the ones to talk to," Jumblatt said.

Hersh would also report that funding was already being channeled by the U. S. and Saudi Arabia to the Brotherhood. Of course, by 2011, the Syrian Muslim Brotherhood along with Al Qaeda would use those resources to begin an armed confrontation with the Syrian government which rages on to this day. The events Jumblatt helped set in motion in 2007 and the war in Syria that has played out since 2011, is linked directly to the "YouStink!" protests. Considering that the various common threads between all involved in Lebanon's current protests include U. S. backing and an overt hatred for Syria, claims that sectarian motivation and politics do not drive "YouStink!" are patently false – an intentional misdirection predicated on "piles of garbage" and repetitive slogans claiming somehow this revolution is not just another U. S.-engineered color revolution. But, like in Armenia earlier this year, it is just another U. S.-engineered color revolution.

First, piles of garbage, then piles of rubble

The ultimate goal is to create chaos in Lebanon sufficient enough to disrupt Hezbollah's operations regionally against the army of terrorists the U. S. and its regional allies, including supporters of "YouStink!" helped organize as far back as 2007. As in the past, protests in Lebanon are aimed not at improving the future of the Lebanese people, but at disrupting the stability of neighboring Syria.

What follows these disingenuous protests is likely a rerun of what followed the so-called "Cedar Revolution" in 2005. After that admittedly U. S.-backed protest and the withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon, Israel conducted extensive air raids and even a ground invasion of the country in the following year. Despite the impression that the "Cedar Revolution" left Lebanon particularly vulnerable, U. S.-backed Israeli operations against Lebanon ended catastrophically for Tel Aviv.

The air campaign failed to achieve any strategic or even tactical objectives and the ground invasion was repelled with Israel calling off the operation before reaching the Litani River – the stated objective of Israeli ground forces.

If "YouStink!" evolves into a sufficient level of chaos undermining Hezbollah in Lebanon, and with the organization's resources already stretched in neighboring Syria fighting terrorist armies backed by the U. S. and its regional allies, Israel will likely be used again in a 2006-style conflict or worse in the hopes that this time the dynamics of the region are decidedly working in the West's favor.

Regardless of the outcome of "YouStink!," the additional pressure political destabilization in Lebanon puts upon Damascus and Tehran can only detract from efforts to restore peace and stability across the Levant.

"YouStink!" organizers claim they are fighting for the future of Lebanon. In reality, they are jeopardizing not only Lebanon's future, but that of the entire region. They are attempting to strike a match in a region already parched by the fires of nearby conflict. If "YouStink!" succeeds in their true objectives, they will bring immeasurable suffering to all in Lebanon and to many more beyond their borders. And, as in the wake of the "Cedar Revolution," the only parties that stand to benefit are the U. S. and its regional allies who seek nothing less than Lebanon's total and perpetual failure as a sovereign State.

The Jew-controlled West defeats a proposal for inspecting Israel's nuclear reactor.

infostormer.com

This is really something else. A huge deal is made out of Iran's nuclear energy program and how it needs to be subjected to numerous inspections. Yet, when it comes to a proposal for the International Atomic Energy Agency to inspect Israel's nuclear reactor, the West does everything they can to block it.

This is more proof that the West is controlled by a bunch of evil, hypocritical

Israel's Dimona nuclear reactor

Jews. They must be dealt with. Jews must be removed from positions of power and banned from White European countries.

From Ynetnews:

"In a 61-43 vote, the International Atomic Energy Agency General Assembly on September 17 defeated a proposal submitted by Egypt and supported by Syria, Iran, Libya, and Iraq to force inspections on Israel's nuclear reactor in Dimona.

"Israel had been working closely with the U. S. and other Western allies behind the scenes in order to reach a majority that would block the proposal.

"Israel has managed to block similar proposals in recent years, saying their purpose was mainly to single out Israel. But this was the first time the proposal was made in the context of the nuclear deal with Iran."

Third world invasion: an on-the-spot description

newobserveronline.com

An eye-witness account from Kamil Bulonis, a Polish travel blog writer, who was present on the Italian-Austrian border on September 5, 2015, as swarms of third world nonwhites poured across the border to invade Austria and Germany, translated from Polish, is presented here. He took all these pictures at the Hungarian-Austrian border.

Verbatim:

Half an hour ago on the border between Italy and Austria I saw with my own eyes a great many immigrants…

Maintaining all solidarity with people in difficult circumstances, I have to say that what I saw arouses horror… This huge mass of people – sorry that I must write this – but these are absolute savages… Vulgar, throwing bottles, shouting loudly: "We want to Germany!" – and is Germany a paradise now?

I saw how they surrounded an auto in which sat an elderly Italian woman, pulled her out of the car by her hair and wanted to drive away with the vehicle. They tried to overturn the bus in which I was traveling with a group of others. They were throwing feces at us, banging on the doors to force the driver to open for them, spitting at the windshield… I ask for what purpose? How is this savagery to assimilate in Germany?

I felt for a moment as if in a war… I really feel sorry for these people, but if they reached Poland – I do not think that they would get any understanding from us. … We were waiting for three hours at the border and ultimately could not cross.

Rescued

Our whole group was transported back to Italy in a police cordon. The bus is damaged, covered with feces, scratched and has broken windows. This is supposed to be an idea for demographics? These big powerful hordes of savages?

Among them there were virtually no women, no children – the vast majority of them being aggressive young men… Just yesterday, while reading about this on all the websites, I had subconsciously felt compassion, worried about their fate; but today after what I saw I am just afraid and yet I am happy that they did not choose our country as their destination. We Poles are simply not ready to accept these people – neither culturally nor financially.

I do not know if anyone is ready. To the E. U. a pathology is marching which we had not yet a chance to ever see, and I am sorry if anyone gets offended by this entry…

I can add that cars arrived with humanitarian aid – mainly food and water – and they were just overturning those cars…

Through megaphones the Austrians announced that there was permission for them to cross the border – they wanted to register them and let them go on – but they did not understand these messages. They did not understand anything.

And this was the greatest of horrors… For among those few thousand people nobody understood Italian or English, or German, or Russian, or Spanish… What mattered was fist law… They fought for permission to move on and they had this permission – but did not realize that they had it!

They opened the luggage hatches of a French bus – everything that was inside being stolen within a short time, some of it left lying strewn on the ground…

Never in my short life had I an opportunity to see such scenes, and I feel that this is just the beginning.

A Constitutional Convention? (Your voice counts)

What's more American than resistance to tyranny? We must stop entering that sheepfold called the voting booth!
American Defense Party

"The Constitution is for all intents and purposes dead anyway since no one follows it; but since everyone gives it lip-service in homilies, we might as well try to take advantage of this knee-jerk reverence in a Con-Con. An article in the September TFF argues that we should have stuck with the Articles of Confederation. Just the fact that we needed a Bill of Rights shows it was defective. It really didn't address or clarify the race issue, an official language, immigration, and it left the role of the Supreme Court murky. Leaving the three branches of government to duke it out (checks and balances) was taking a big chance." – Sid

"The Con Con scam has tried to get up and running for some time now – by approaching people who don't know (or do they?) what it's all about. Ask yourself: Who controls the media? Please be sharp enough to realize that those same munchkins would steer a Con Con right where the cabal having employed such con artists want it headed. Before legitimate States can effectively confer among themselves about any new Articles of Confederation to replace the now dead U. S. Constitution, they must first secede from deecee's occupation regime. Stop voting the ZOG's game! Let us be fully awake to such maneuvers. We're not about to overthrow that enemy playing by its rules." – Olaf

"I do agree. The people who wrote our Constitution weren't perfect, but they had not been communized like our present population. A con-con scares the heck out of me. Just as in elections to 'select' our government officials, no one worth a darn would have a chance of being elected or appointed to sit on a con-con committee. The crooks with the money would rule the whole event and we would be so much worse off.

"Secession might improve our situation, but we would have to cull all the rotten Southern legislators who have taken the 'PC' pill and joined the effort to destroy us. We would also have to implement a re-education program… a program to re-wash the brains of our all too compliant White Southerners who have gone to the 'dark' side. It would take decades to undo the harm that has been done. Maybe our great-grandchildren can straighten out this mess we have now." – Dianne

Jockeying to cripple the ruble continues

Russia expects $60 oil in 2016, but is ready for $50, says Kremlin.

rt.com

Oil prices could plunge below $40 per barrel and beyond, but such falls are expected to be short-lived, said Russian presidential aide Andrey Belousov at the Eastern Economic Forum in Vladivostok.

The Russian budget in 2016 will be based on an oil price at $50 per barrel, but various forecasts expect next year's crude price to be $60, he said.

Speaking at the forum in the Russian Far Eastern city of Vladivostok on September 4, President Vladimir Putin said he sees nothing dramatic in the volatility of energy prices.

Can handle it

"These are processes that occur in the economy as a whole, in the Asian markets," Putin said, adding that the prices are affected by Iran's return to the crude market as well.

Meanwhile, Russian Energy Minister Aleksandr Novak has announced that the share of the Asia-Pacific region in the structure of Russian oil exports will grow three-and-a-half times by 2020 and will reach up to 28-30 percent of overall crude sales abroad.

Putin has also supported the transition of the national budget from the current three-year period to annually, saying it's now "impossible to forecast how world markets will behave under current conditions and how it will affect the budget revenue."

Sovereignty and the Tenth Amendment

Sovereign States gave birth to a federal servant that now tells them what they must and may not do.

Constitutional genius Jefferson Davis here resumes his statement.

By John Peeples
firstfreedom.net
From his great work,
The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government

C. S. A. President Jefferson Davis speaks

If any lingering doubt could have existed as to the reservation of their entire sovereignty by the people of the respective States, when they organized the Federal Union, it would have been removed by the adoption of the tenth amendment to the Constitution, which was not only one of the amendments proposed by various States when ratifying that instrument, but the particular one in which they substantially agreed, and upon which they urgently insisted. Indeed, it is quite certain that the Constitution would never have received the assent of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina and perhaps other States, but for a well-grounded assurance that the substance of this amendment would be adopted as soon as the requisite formalities could be complied with. That amendment is in these words:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

The full meaning of this article may not be as clear to us as it was to the men of that period, on account of the confusion of ideas by which the term "people" – plain enough to them – has since been obscured, and also the ambiguity attendant upon the use of the little conjunction or, which has been said to be the most equivocal word in our language, and for that reason has been excluded from indictments in the English courts. The true intent and meaning of the provision, however, may be ascertained from an examination and comparison of the terms in which it was expressed by the various States which proposed it, and whose ideas it was intended to embody.

A bronze likeness of Jefferson Davis stands guard before the Alabama Capitol upon whose steps he swore as Confederate States of America President to defend our sovereignty against all would-be tyrants. In 2001 such forces of darkness were already busy seeking to "relocate" this statue "temporarily" so that Lee Warner and his so-called Historical Commission could build an underground parking garage here. Quickly organized by alert activists, the Save Our Capitol Citizens Initiative relocated Warner, to where he could pursue his agenda back up North. Jeff Davis never actually "retired" at Beauvoir, but wrote the words you're reading here. For the defenders of righteous principles, it ain't over till the angels sing.

Survival instinct

Massachusetts and New Hampshire, in their ordinances of ratification, expressing the opinion "that certain amendments and alterations in the said Constitution would remove the fears and quiet the apprehensions of many of the good people of this Commonwealth, and more effectually guard against an undue administration of the Federal Government," each recommended several such amendments, putting this at the head of the following form: "That it be explicitly declared that all powers not expressly delegated by the aforesaid Constitution are reserved to the several States, to be by them exercised."

Of course, those stanch republican communities meant the people of the States – not their governments, as something distinct from the people.

New York expressed herself as follows: "That the powers of government may be reassumed by the people whenever it shall become necessary to their happiness; that every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by the said Constitution clearly delegated to the Congress of the United States, or the departments of the government thereof, remains to the people of the several States, or to their respective governments, to whom they may have granted same, and those clauses in the said Constitution, which declare that Congress shall not have or exercise certain powers not given by the said Constitution; but such clauses are to be construed either as exceptions to certain specified powers or as inserted merely for greater caution."

South Carolina expressed the idea thus: "This Convention doth also declare that no section or paragraph of the said Constitution warrants a construction that the States do not retain every power not expressly relinquished by them and vested in the General Government of the Union."

North Carolina proposed it in these terms: "Each State in the Union shall respectively retain every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by the Constitution delegated to the Congress of the United States or to the departments of the General Government."

Rhode Island gave, in her long-withheld assent to the Constitution, "in full confidence" that certain proposed amendments would be adopted, the first of which was expressed in these words:

"That Congress shall guarantee to each State its SOVEREIGNTY, Freedom, and Independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by this Constitution expressly delegated to the United States."

This was in May, 1790, when nearly three years had been given to discussion and explanation of the new Government by its Founders and others, when it had been in actual operation for more than a year, and where there was every advantage for a clear understanding of its nature and principles. Under such circumstances, and in the "full confidence" that this language expressed its meaning and intent, the people of Rhode Island signified their "accession" to the "Confederate Republic" of the States already united.

No objections were made from any quarter to the principles asserted in these various forms, or to the amendment in which it was finally expressed, although many thought it unnecessary, as being merely declaratory of what would have been sufficiently obvious without it – that the functions of the Government of the United States were strictly limited to the exercise of such powers as were expressly delegated, and that the people of the several States retained all others.

Is it compatible with reason to suppose that people so chary of the delegation of specific powers or functions could have meant to surrender or transfer the very basis and origin of all power – their inherent sovereignty – and this, not by express grant, but by implication?

Mr. Everett, following, whether consciously or not, in the line of Mr. Webster's ill-considered objection to the term "compact," takes exception to the sovereignty of the States on the ground that "the word 'Sovereignty' does not occur" in the Constitution. He admits that the States were sovereign under the Articles of Confederation. How could they relinquish or be deprived of their sovereignty without even a mention of it – when the tenth amendment confronts us with the declaration that nothing was surrendered by implication – that everything was reserved unless expressly delegated to the United States or prohibited to the States? Here is an attribute which they certainly possessed – which nobody denies or can deny, that they did possess – and of which Mr. Everett says no mention is made in the Constitution. In what conceivable way, then, was it lost or alienated?

Much has been said of the "prohibition" of the exercise by the States of certain functions of sovereignty; such as, making treaties, declaring war, coining money, etc. This is only a part of the general compact, by which the contracting parties covenant, one with another, to abstain from the separate exercise of certain powers, which they agree to intrust to the management and control of the Union or general agency of the parties associated. It is not a prohibition imposed upon them from without, or from above, by any external or superior power, but is self-imposed by their free consent. The case is strictly analogous to that of individuals forming a mercantile or manufacturing copartnership, who voluntarily refrain, as individuals, from engaging in other pursuits or speculations, from lending their individual credit or from the exercise of any other right of a citizen, which they may think proper to subject to the consent or intrust to the management of the firm.

The prohibitory clauses of the Constitution referred to are not at all denial of the full sovereignty of the States, but merely an agreement among them to exercise certain powers of sovereignty in concert, and not separately and apart.

To have transferred sovereignty from the people to a Government would have been to have fought the battles of the Revolution in vain – not for the freedom and independence of the States, but for a mere change of masters. Such a thought or purpose could not have been in the heads or hearts of those who molded the Union, and could have found lodgement only when the ebbing tide of patriotism and fraternity had swept away the landmarks which they erected who sought by the compact of Union to secure and perpetuate the liberties then possessed. The men who had won at great cost the independence of their respective States were deeply impressed with the value of Union, but they could never have consented, like "the base Judean," to fling away the priceless pearl of State sovereignty for any possible alliance.

– Jefferson Davis (from his great, two-volume work, The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government)

Even after spending two years in a Federal prison, with no trial, Jefferson Davis refused a pardon, never apologized, never changed his mind, and wrote this great work explaining why he had no reason to do so.

Migrating toward again-Jewish-incited World War Three

Pure logic: A Czech politician is saying they should house migrants in what was once a concentration camp both by and for Germans.

By Andrew Anglin
dailystormer.com

Terezin: A new home for our new friends!

Sometimes you're thinking about a problem, and you feel like you've come at it from every angle and still remain stumped, and then some Slav comes along and is, like, "Hey, what about we…"

And then you're just like "Duh! Why didn't I think of that!

Jerusalem Post:

"POLICE in the Czech Republic are investigating comments made on Facebook by an extremist politician calling for refugees to be placed in Terezin, the former Nazi concentration camp.

"Adam Bartos, the leader of the fringe yet vocal far-right nationalist National Democracy Party, published the comments about the site, located in the central European country, on Monday.

"Reacting to the establishment of a refugee camp near the country's border with Slovakia, Bartos wrote, 'Why build tent camps for the aliens? We have the beautiful fortress town of Terezin where the aliens could concentrate before they are can carry penalties of up to three years in prison…

"Bartos is under investigation for four incidents involving allegedly racist, anti-Semitic and violence-inciting remarks. He also keeps a blog titled Hall of Jewish Fame that critics say lists politicians, journalists and other public figures of supposedly Jewish origin."

[End Jerusalem post article]

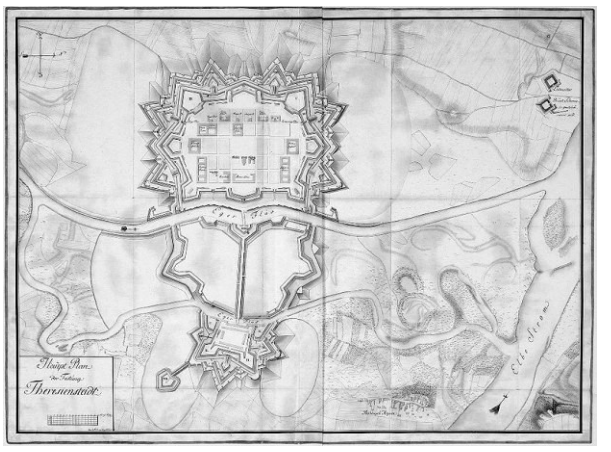
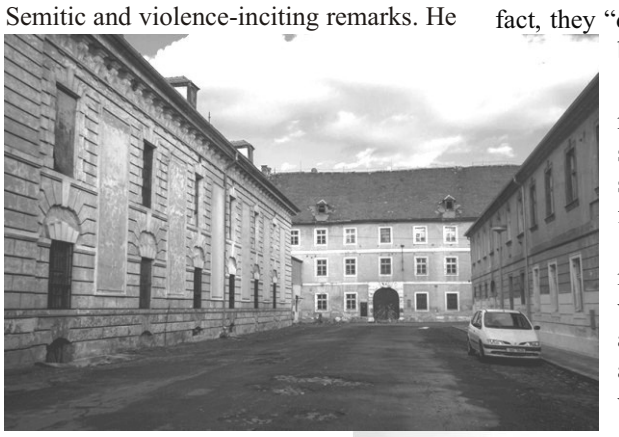
Terezin isn't even a concentration camp. It's simply a military base, originally established as a fortress back in the 18th century by Joseph II, the Habsburg emperor, with a small walled town around it. It was turned into a "ghetto" to house dangerous Christ-killing psychopaths (a.k.a. Jews) during the war.

"A police spokeswoman told the Czech News Agency on Monday that the police will probe whether or not the comments constitute a criminal act. According to Czech law, hate speech and comments inciting national, racial or religious hatred



Terezín map (1790)



After the Jews won the war, they used it to hold ethnic Germans, so they could torture and murder them. Eventually, the place was turned back into a military base, but was shut down after Communism fell.

The Germans were able to hold 32,000 people in this place. Now it's completely empty.

It would – just in basic practical terms here – be a perfect place to put all of these "migrants," as we make plans to ship them home.

Here are a few pictures of the place which – suffice it to say – is a hell of a lot better than these "refugees" deserve (as, in fact, they "deserve" nothing other than to be kicked into the fields).

The only reason you would not make use of this fortress to store these people is that you specifically want to use them to further destroy Prague.

I was in Prague about 18 months ago, and the streets were already filled with Black and brown drug dealers, pimps and beggars. I can't imagine what the place looks like now.

Shall the Jews finally realize their wish?

This is a story about surviving against all odds. Some generations of genuine Aryan grit – such as the Germans in 1946 and today's iron willed Hungarians – can handle it. Where does that leave us?

By Christine Miller
millercbm@gmail.com

Every period has its generation gap. In some of them the break is very wide, in others almost imperceptible. In my youth, which fell during and after WWII, there was no gap but a chasm.

After their victory the first order of the Allies to us Germans was (under threat of severe penalty for noncompliance): Bring your weapons and radios to a designated area. In the evening, therefore, instead of being entertained by radio we listened to our elders, in this case my mother (my father being missing in action someplace in Russia) and her sister. The stories were always the same, namely how it was before the war. Before the war you could buy everything from bananas to soap to shoes and shoelaces, butter, oil, thread and all the material one needed for repairs.

To us youngsters, that sounded like a beautiful, never-never land, not quite real. We only knew the barter system. Anything needed for sheer survival had to be gotten on the black market. Woe to those who had nothing to trade. A former employer of my mother sent her a handful of unroasted coffee beans. She bartered the beans for a washtub, which also functioned as our bathtub.

Endurance

In retrospect, I am still amazed how quickly the Germans reverted back to more primitive former times. Farmers who had sheep sheared them, carted the fleece, brought their spinning wheels down from the attic and the women folk started to spin again. The attic in general had become a resource center. Old clothing was brought down, and what could not be re-tailored was cut into strips and woven into runner carpets. My old aunt made slippers from that long grass growing in a clearing of the woods. She braided it and sewed the braids together on a lath. Pieces of an old bicycle tire were sewn onto the bottoms as soles. We recycled swastikas to make dirndls. They were pretty, with a red skirt, black bodice and white blouse. And we laughed, knowing the origin of that material.

Willpower

My aunt, Tante Notburga, made a lye solution from our wood ashes. It was harsh on the hands, but made the laundry clean. Only the farmers could make soap, as they had the necessary lard. Since sugar was severely rationed, we made beet syrup to sweeten everything from cookies to herbal teas brewed of leaves picked in the wild. How did we get flour? By gleaning after the farmers had harvested their rye and wheat fields. My mother rubbed out the kernels by hand.

We craved fat. If the butcher had given us a little lard instead of the tiny piece of meat which our ration card allowed us we would have felt lucky.

City folks swarmed out into the country in overcrowded, windowless, slow moving trains to collect the beechnuts which they then pressed into oil. The forest floor was litter free because every pine cone and dead branch was picked up to provide a little warmth and cook the meager rations.

My uncle Guido, whom his father had sent to us from Augsburg due to the air raids, was two years older than I. We two youngsters tried our best to help our family. Reichertsried was idyllic. It had fourteen houses and a chapel. The bell rang every Sunday at three o'clock to summon us for rosary.

Reichertsried also had a small dump. Guido and I scrounged through the place and got lucky. We found an unbroken bowl and a little pot, for us a real treasure! We were very disappointed when our elders did not think likewise. (But the bowl and pot were used every day.)

Guido had gotten a paper model airplane from somewhere. He traded it for a spool of red thread meant for sewing swastikas and became swollen with self-importance not supported by our elders; but everything was sewn with that red thread, the only thread in the house.

My mattress was a straw sack. I slept just fine and only wished that our elders would stop complaining about their hard bedding. In retrospect I think the lives of us youngsters would have been more cheerful but for that generation chasm. Our elders just could not refrain from bringing up their memories of a more plentiful time.

Resilience

Germany and we Germans made it, even though robbed of one fifth of our territory, the rest being quartered and parceled out among the victors. We starved and shivered in the winter while those allies overheated their quarters to sauna temperatures.

"Germany must Perish," wrote Theodore Kaufman. They did not succeed during and after WWII. But today, the enemy is within the gates. Israel does not accept any migrants. USraeI makes the wars and Germany not only accepts the migrants but even attracts them with monetary handouts the way a decaying body draws maggots. Will the Jews finally get their wish?

Confiscation, not liberation

By Elliott Germain
Transfer of Power

Was the Lincoln government protecting slavery? His Secretary of War, Simon Cameron, ordered Union troops to enforce the Fugitive Slave Act by returning runaway slaves to their owners, except those slaves which had run out of the Confederate States. The Union's enforcement of legal slavery would include those slaves which Yankee General Benjamin Butler returned to their "loyal to the Union" masters in New Orleans, while putting the other "runaways" into work camps, declaring these humans to be the contraband of war. This also occurred in the "Department of South Carolina" under Union General Forster, who ordered the conscription of every able bodied Negro male over the age of thirteen. Some of these children were physically taken without notification to their parents, and some who resisted were shot. History, make a note: the Union Army was not a liberating army, it was a confiscating army.

True resistance

Confederate troops fired upon Fort Sumter on April 12, 1861 (more details later), and on April 15, President Lincoln called for 75,000 volunteers from the non-Confederate States to fight what he termed an "insurrection." More than that number of volunteers responded. Was that because the Northern people had enough of the South, or was it perhaps the rampant unemployment rate in the North? If the President today called for volunteers to march against South Carolina, he would likely get 75,000 volunteers. Take a closer glimpse of the True North in their resistance to the Lincoln war machine.

Remember that border States were also slave States; but, on April 15th, when Lincoln first called for volunteers, the North made no claims to be fighting the Confederacy to free slaves. Remember also that, on April 15, the Confederacy consisted of only seven States, with its flag of seven stars. Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina and Arkansas hadn't yet seceded. These and other border States did not respond to Lincoln's call for troops to serve in his private, "Executive Branch" war.

The Governor of Kentucky, homeplace to Mrs. Lincoln, gave this reply to Lincoln's request for troops to march against South Carolina:

"Kentucky will furnish no troops for the wicked purpose of subduing her sister Southern States."

Because of the governor's remarks and Kentucky's pro-Southern leanings, by August, Lincoln had established a Federal military camp outside of Lexington to insure "neutrality."

The Governor of North Carolina telegraphed the President stating that he could not respond to his call for troops as he doubted the President's authority to do so.

Governor Harris of Tennessee, doubtful of the constitutional powers of Lincoln's actions, replied:

"Tennessee will not furnish a single man for coercion, but fifty-thousand, if necessary, for the defense of our rights or those of our Southern brothers."

Virginia, Arkansas, Maryland, Missouri and Delaware also refused to send troops. The Maryland legislature was considering a vote to secede and join the Confederacy until Mr. Lincoln moved troops into Maryland and arrested all those who spoke out against the new Federal Government's war regime.

Massachusetts was quick to respond; and the politicians of the New York Legislature immediately raised 3 million dollars toward attacking South Carolina. Only four days after Lincoln called for troops, the 6th Massachusetts Infantry had reached Maryland on their way to Washington D. C. Baltimore reacted, its rioters armed with sticks and stones against Union troops bearing rifles and pistols. The 6th Massachusetts countered by killing 12 civilians on April 19th. The Marylanders responded by killing five soldiers. And remember, seven days earlier during the exchange of artillery fire at Fort Sumter no one was killed in action on either side. So the first deaths of the war were inflicted by the Union Army against Baltimore civilians; and, appropriately, the first Union soldiers to fall in the War of 1861 were killed by Maryland civilians in that same skirmish.

Those Maryland civilians also severed the railroad link from Washington D.C. to points north, thus forcing any future D.C. bound soldiers from all points north to travel by ship up the Potomac instead. This resulted in Lincoln declaring martial law in Maryland. Citizens of the border States loved their freedom and Constitutional rights as much as those in the Southern States.

By May 10th, 1861, riots broke out in Missouri which ended in a clash between Union soldiers and the Missouri Militia. Riots and protests spread throughout the North, and were always blamed on the Copperheads. There were also Northern newspapers writing in protest against the unconstitutional war Lincoln had declared. One such newspaper was the New York Herald, siding with the South early on as revealed in this article dated November 11th, 1860:

"The South has an undeniable right to secede from the Union. In the event of secession, the City of New York, and the State of New Jersey and very likely Connecticut will separate from New England when the Black man is put on a pinnacle above the White."

The lack of popular support in the North for the Republicans' war against the South called for stronger measures directed against those Northern citizens by the new emerging Federal power.

The draft riots

On March 3, 1863, Congress passed the Federal Enrollment Act. This draft law was to raise an army by the drawing of names. On July 13, the New York draft office held the first drawing. This resulted in a mob of 50,000 New Yorkers storming the draft office; they killed its superintendent and burned the office of the Provost Marshall. The mob also beat a Union colonel to death and attacked the Mayor's home and burned the Tribune newspaper offices of the liberal Horace Greeley.

New York was already experiencing a resentment of the war which, by 1863, was being altruistically waged to enforce the Emancipation Proclamation. There was also an undercurrent of resentment against big New York businesses which had been importing cheap Negro labor to work for starvation wages. These weren't slaves, just dirt cheap labor. You see, the South had to house, feed, clothe and give medical care to their slaves, whereas in New York "big business" could import Negroes, give them ten cents a day and wash their hands of any moral responsibility. Consider the words of the Hazard Circular which was distributed to American bankers during the American war of 1861, comparing the advantage of controlling wages over the use of slavery:

"Slavery is likely to be abolished by the war power and chattel slavery destroyed. This I and my European friends are in favor of; for slavery is but the owning of labor and carries with it the care of the laborer, while the European plan, led on by England, is capital control of labor by controlling wages. This can be done by controlling money."

The race riots

The resentment of this employment practice by the resident workforce in New York caused the "draft riot" to turn into a "race riot." Negroes were hunted down and killed in the streets. An evacuated Negro orphanage was burned. Northern history plays this down, although some casualty estimates go as high as 1,000 Negroes killed. Federal troops were called to quell the riot which resulted in a thousand more wounded or killed. The rioting lasted four days.

The North was subject to continual internal, often quite violent, resistance throughout the war. On March 28, 1864, Charleston, Illinois, was the scene of anti-war riots which killed five and wounded twenty, the worst since those New York riots in 1863. Many people in the North supported the war effort, as is always the case in wartime, but in light of these facts there is considerable evidence showing that this war didn't happen out of popular sentiment but was manufactured by special interests.

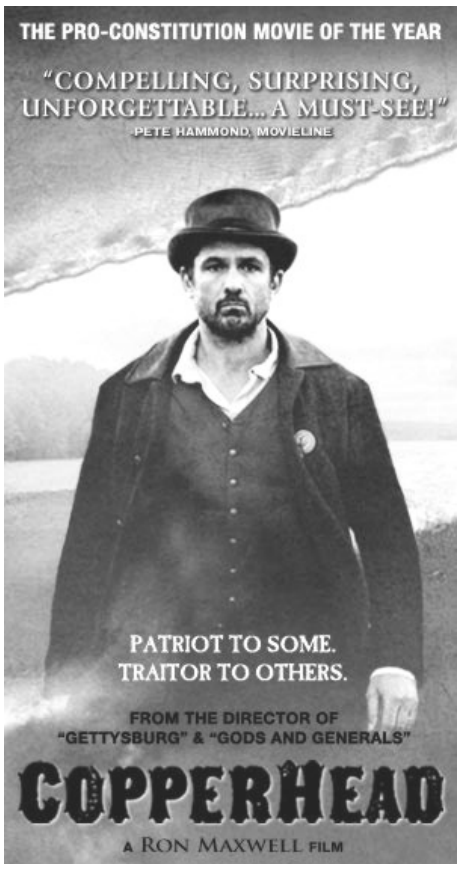
The lack of support by Northerners for Mr. Lincoln's declared war is also reflected in the fact that a Yankee could buy himself out of the draft with money, and that 116,000 Yankees chose to do just that. Yet, despite all of these setbacks, there was in fact a Union Army; and a closer look at its prowess will give us a better understanding of the True North.

The Union Army

Having discussed the draft dodgers, a review of those who did serve in Lincoln's infamous war against the South would be in order. Out of every 100 Yankees drafted, only 20 served. As early as 1862, the Provost Marshal estimated that there had been 100,000 desertions from the armed services. Desertions between 1863 and 1865 averaged 1,250 per week, about 10% of the overall Army deserting. Desertions seemed to coincide with the battle patterns. The highest figure of desertions in one week was 5,000. Bounties of five to thirty dollars were placed on deserters.

Out of desperation, in March of 1863 Lincoln offered amnesty to all deserters who would return to duty. He also recruited mercenaries from overseas. Most of those immigrants coming to America arrived at Northern ports. During the "civil" war years, 764,000 immigrants came through Northern ports while only 191,000 landed at Southern ports. Lincoln's need for (temporarily) warm bodies brought the North to offer citizenship to all who would serve in his war. Some of those foreigners were the same "Union" soldiers having burned their way through Georgia, "saving America," yet they couldn't speak a word of English (ominous and foreboding)!

Lincoln's invoking the Emancipation Proclamation reflected his hope that, by declaring all slaves in the South to be free, he might incite them to rise up against their masters. Such an uprising didn't happen because Lincoln (and the Yankees) failed to understand the master/servant familial relationship that existed across the South. Lincoln also wanted to find some noble cause to excuse his treason against the U. S. Constitution. Out of desperate need for replacements in his army, he decided to enlist Northern Negroes.



Weren't Negroes allowed in the Union Army from the war's beginning? No. Until 1862, Congress refused to let Negroes into the Union Army. In August 1862, Lincoln himself refused an opportunity to recruit two Indiana Negro volunteer regiments. However, that same year in Louisiana, Union General Butler did place himself in control over battalions of liberated slaves in work camps. Butler called those former slaves "contraband of war." Lincoln's War Secretary, Simon Cameron, confirmed General Butler's use of human beings in his letter to Butler in New Orleans:

"President Lincoln desires the right to hold slaves to be fully recognized. The war is prosecuted for the Union hence no question concerning slavery will arise."

In the same spirit of General Butler, on July 12th, 1862, Congress passed the "Confiscation Act" which, under direction of War Secretary Staunton, provided for the enlistment of Southern Negroes in the Union Army to be used primarily as guards for plantations and settlements. This pattern spread throughout the occupied South resulting in abuses of White civilians. The continuation of this policy after the war instigated the creation of the Ku Klux Klan.

Finally in May of 1863, the first Negro Northern Regiment was formed: the 54th Massachusetts Volunteers, which was sent to occupied Hilton Head, South Carolina to be trained. In July, 1863, this regiment attacked the Wagner Confederate Battery in South Carolina resulting in 1,511 dead Negro Union soldiers and 174 Confederate dead. White Union officers used the Negro soldiers as cannon fodder.

In the Union Army, which was fighting against the so-called racist South, Negro enlisted men always served under White officers. A White soldier with the rank of private earned $13 dollars a month. The Negro private earned $7 a month. When it became legal for Negroes to serve in the Army, White draft dodgers from the North began "buying Negroes" as substitutes, a practice that frustrated the Union Army so much that they passed a law stating that a White draftee could only be substituted by a White replacement. (It must have had something to do with being equal?)

Deceitful writ

Some soldiers resented the politics of Lincoln and paid the price. When Captain Tansill noted Lincoln's inaugural address, he resigned his commission in protest, for which he was arrested and jailed. Union morale began getting worse following the Emancipation Proclamation. After Lincoln gave the Proclamation on January 1, 1863, hundreds of Union officers and soldiers protested, left the Union army and went home. Remember, there were thousands of slaveholders in the Union Army. Even General Grant, a slave owner, spoke out against fighting the war over slavery:

"Should I become convinced that the object of the government is to execute the wishes of the abolitionists, I pledge you my honor as a man and a soldier I would resign my commission and carry my sword to the other side."

Kumbaya

There was a family singing group that entertained the Union Troops named the Hutchinson Family Singers from New Hampshire. Some of their songs favored abolition. They aroused so many protests from McClellan's Army of the Potomac that the Union Army Commander forbade them to sing in Army camps (Lincoln rescinded the order). Some Union officers also refused to lead Negro units and were dismissed by the Army.

After General Butler was finally booted out of the Union Army, in part for his mistreatment of Negroes in Louisiana, he ran for Congress and became one of the foremost Congressional oppressors of the postwar South. During his campaign for elected office he introduced the first military service medal awarded to a Negro soldier, and, like so many other White "Civil Rights" leaders, Butler was able to turn "slave contraband" into "political contraband."

Knowing the True North is essential to understanding the War of 1861 and realizing that the motives which governed that war were not such altruistic concerns for the Negro as implied in today's government education and media indoctrination. There is much more truth to uncover to fully reveal exactly how the Transfer of Power occurred during and after the Treason of 1861 and how it affects your life today. And, for some necessary added depth to this subject, a presentation of the True South is required.

The True South (Not quite Dante's Inferno)

An entire definition of the Confederate States here and now is not necessary, but particular points about the South will remove the stereotypical image that has been presented by the government and corporate media. This might be where it is expected that the author make a personal statement against slavery and, like so many other Virginians before me, I will. Slavery is wrong as a means of labor, it is wrong for the slaves and it is wrong for non-slaves competing in the same occupation. The political use of slavery as a motivation or excuse to destroy the Constitution was also wrong.

Some persons and organizations in the South who were extremely vocal in favor of slavery during the 1850s and 1860s were acting in part toward the benefit of the very same foreign powers who had introduced and forced slavery on America. British Corporations such as the Virginia Company operated under the King's permission, and the King's government in the colonies forced America into permanent slavery. It is an error to believe that the War of 1861 was fought over slavery or racism.

Unhappily "liberated"

During the War of 1861, General Halleck, Commander of the Union Army, ordered that no more Southern Negroes could be permitted behind Union lines because so many of them were acting as spies for the Confederacy. Why didn't these Negro Confederate spies just run away from the "evil Southerners" once they were behind Union lines? Because they were loyal to the Confederacy and were trusted by other Confederates. There were also Southern Negro prisoners of war held in Union prison camps.

There were more free Negroes in the South than in the North; 500,000 in the South, and 226,000 in the North. The collective value of property owned by the free Negroes of New Orleans alone was in excess of 15 million dollars. Virginia was the first Nation in the world to outlaw the international trafficking of slaves on October 5, 1778. That was after Virginia became an independent Nation but before Virginia joined in the federation of United States, when Patrick Henry was Governor. The Northern States that were trafficking in slaves lobbied the Constitutional Convention to protect the slave trade until 1808 from such actions on a national level, and they were successful as written in Article 1, Section 9, clause one. However, with regard to Congress being prohibited from even discussing or stopping the importation of slaves, clause one states: "as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit," meaning Virginia thought it proper to allow none – no international slave trade – and so, even with Article 1, Section 9, Virginia could continue to prohibit such importations. The 1808 limitation lobbied by Northern interests did not reverse Virginia's law prohibiting the international trade of humans.

Worldwide serfdom

Remember, discounting those slaves that the American Indians already owned before the White-eyes settled in America, the first so-called slaves arriving in this country from Africa came to Jamestown, Virginia, in 1619. Those first 20 African Negroes were actually indentured servants who, after seven years of servitude, obtained their freedom; such was the practice with indentured servants, Negro or White, in the colonies. Some accounts say that this practice was because the imported Negroes were made Christians, and "Christians" cannot be made slaves. These slaves were imported under authority of the Virginia Company, a London-based corporation.

English Crown's interest

One of the original 20 slaves, Anthony Johnson, was set free after his seven year servitude. He became the first Negro to own land in Virginia. After becoming free, Anthony Johnson began to buy slaves to work for him. When Mr. Johnson's Negro slaves served their seven years' indenture, they too sought their freedom, but Johnson refused. One of Johnson's slaves sought refuge at the home of a White Virginian named Parker. Johnson then sued Parker (Johnson vs. Parker, Northampton County, 1654) to get "his slave" back. The court, under the power of the English Crown, whose corporations had a vested interest in making slavery permanent, found in favor of permanent slavery, thus making a Negro (Anthony Johnson) and the English Crown the "founding fathers" of permanent slavery in America. By 1830, 10,000 slaves were owned by free American Negroes. And, at the beginning of the War of 1861, 3,500 Negroes owned slaves.

The Establishment in 1672

The motives of the court and the Crown in Johnson vs. Parker were economic. The King's corporations needed permanent slaves to compete with Spain in the tobacco industry. Although slavery was already outlawed in England (don't bring them there) in 1572, the King used slaves in America to make a fortune. In 1672, the King formed his own monopoly in the trafficking of slaves called the Royal African Company. No one else could traffic slaves into America except under the King's corporate flag. He favored the New England shipping industry to carry on that evil trade in his name. In Virginia's Declaration of Rights, issued in May of 1776, when Virginia became a separate Nation, was stated that one of the main reasons for their separation from Britain was that the King insisted on bringing slaves to Virginia against the will of the people of Virginia.

Virginia and other Southern States tried to solve the slave-race problem with such attempts as the American Colonization Society which had some success in giving Negroes their own destiny. Liberia became the first Negro Republic in the world, its first President, Joseph Roberts, being a Negro from Petersburg, Virginia. In 1779, Thomas Jefferson proposed to the Virginia General Assembly that they purchase the slaves and settle them back in Africa, but the General Assembly did not have the funds.

Elusive answer

After President Thomas Jefferson made the Louisiana Purchase, the Virginia General Assembly asked Congress to set aside a part of those lands as a Nation for Negroes. Congress would not. Other attempts were made in the South, like the proposal that the State of Virginia purchase the children of slaves to end the cycle of slavery, but again, a question of money.

The Confederate Constitution outlawed the international trafficking of slaves. In 1864, Duncan Kenner proposed a plan to the Confederate Congress which would have committed the South to freeing the slaves if Britain or France would give the Confederacy political recognition. Jefferson Davis and the Congress agreed, but, by the time Kenner got to London in 1865, it was too late. Also in 1865, the Confederate Congress passed and President Davis signed a bill which would, upon agreement with each State, give freedom to slaves who would serve as Confederate soldiers. But all of this came too late to save the Confederacy.

Throughout the war, free Southern Negroes were serving the Confederacy on land and sea, in hospitals and as skilled craftsmen and laborers. Some Southerners today claim Negroes served in the actual "military" but that assertion falls short of providing documentation of any Negroes in service to the Confederacy as identified by a military "rank," which is essential in military service. But they did serve "the cause." As soon as the war broke out, free Negroes rallied behind the Confederacy. On April 26, 1861, in Petersburg, Virginia, 300 free Negroes volunteered to work on fortifications. One of the Negroes, Charles Tinsley said:

"We are willing to aid Virginia's cause to the utmost extent of our ability." And, after receiving the Confederate flag, Tinsley said, "I could feel no greater pride, no more genuine gratification, than to plant this flag on Fortress Monroe."

Innumerable true accounts attest Negro support for the South. Negro Churches after the war honored Confederate leaders such as Stonewall Jackson and supported Confederate memorials. There are accounts of European Journalists touring the South during and just prior to the war observing how the slaves in the South were living better than White factory workers in the North (not to mention living better than those imported Negroes in New York who were working for starvation wages).

Not everybody's vocation

Out of a Southern White population of 5,450,000, only 347,000 owned slaves, and a very small number of those men beat their slaves, just as a small number of them beat their wives – neither practice being condoned by Southerners – and it was not the cause of the war. How the General of all the Northern Armies, Ulysses Grant, himself a slave owner, felt about slavery is not well known, but the Commander of all the Confederate Armies, Robert E. Lee, freed his slaves before the war started and declared that slavery was "a moral and political evil."

These facts are placed before you to remove the moral high ground from being exclusively Northern: that the true causes of the War of 1861 can be less emotionally considered. Neither will these facts attempt to cover the "sins of the South," which we shall also discuss. The purpose here is to objectively trace the who, what, when, where, how and even why questions and answers for America's Transfer of Power, in the process of which, let the chips fall where they may. Russia ready to consider troops for Syria

presstv.ir

Russia says it is ready to consider any request from the Syrian government for the dispatch of military forces to the Arab country, which is involved in heavy battles with foreign-sponsored Takfiri terrorists.

"If there is any request, then it would naturally be discussed and evaluated through bilateral contacts and dialogue," spokesman for the Kremlin Dmitry Peskov said on September 18, adding, however, that "It is difficult to talk about this hypothetically."

Spokesman for the Kremlin Dmitry Peskov

The comments came a day after Syrian Foreign Minister Walid al-Muallem said Damascus would ask for the deployment of Russian forces to Syria if need be.

"There is no joint fighting on the ground with Russian troops, but if we felt such a need, we would study it and demand," Muallem said, adding, however, that the Syrian army and volunteer forces are still capable of fighting militants without any foreign assistance.

"Nothing to hide"

The Kremlin has repeatedly denied recent claims by the United States and its allies that Russia has boots on the ground in Syria.

Earlier last month, Russian Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova said her country has never tried to hide its military cooperation with Syria, explaining that Moscow has openly sent "military specialists" to the Arab State.

She also said that Russia is supplying military equipment to Syria in line with previously-signed agreements between the two sides on bilateral defense ties, saying such a move is aimed at helping the Arab Nation in its anti-terror fight.

On opposite sides

Moscow has also slammed the West for creating hysteria over Russian interactions with Syria.

A day earlier, Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov denied speculations that Russia is engaged in a military buildup in Syria as suggested by the United States and the NATO military alliance.

Russia and the West are deeply divided over the Syrian crisis, which has claimed the lives of at least 240,000 people in Syria since its outbreak in March 2011. While Russia has been supporting Damascus in its fight against militants, the Western States want to see Syrian President Bashar al-Assad removed from power.

The U. S., along with its Western and regional allies, has been among the staunch supporters of the militant groups operating against the Syrian government over the past four years.

The zenith of the Bund: Madison Square Garden rally

germanamericanbund.synthasite.com

While the series of legal attacks against the Bund may have drained the group's financial resources, the publicity they produced for the Bund was invaluable. Public attention to the Bund reached its zenith on February 20, 1939, when the group held its largest and most publicized rally at Madison Square Garden. The rally was by all measures a resounding success.

It was officially held to honor George Washington's 207th birthday but it served primarily as a forum for the Bund to advance its ideology and rhetoric to a much wider American audience.

The rally was held at a most auspicious time for the Bund. Kuhn's steadfast Americanization program was beginning to pay off. The Bund's image was less foreign-looking and hence less suspicious to many Americans; the organization had been legally vindicated from all charges of espionage and subversion, and now the Bund had the opportunity to hammer the American public with their main message of Americanism, patriotism and anti-Communism. Madison Square Garden was filled to capacity with an estimated 20,000 in attendance. The event garnered prodigious press coverage. The Los Angeles Times called it the "Battle of Madison Square Garden."[1] Advertised as a "Pro-American Rally, a Mass Demonstration for True Americanism and George Washington Birthday Exercises," it was the most important opportunity for the Bund to showcase its Americanization and win public support.[2] The Bund's newspaper took advantage of the opportunity to gloat over recent Bund victories and sway American public opinion in their favor. Advertisements of the event called to

ALL AMERICAN PATRIOTS:

The increasingly violent, malicious and poisonous attempts to silence and cripple the German American Bund by lying press and radio propaganda, by attempted riots and coercion of hall owners, by strikes to force dismissal of Bund Members from their employment and by fraudulent indictments and convictions…prove that the communistic and other subversive Jewish-Marxistic powers directing these persecutions are in mortal fear of the Bund reaching and enlightening those Americans still in the dark concerning the red scourge! These persecutions prove definitively that the German American Bund IS the most outspoken, uncompromising and therefore the most EFFECTIVE Opponent of all Atheistic Subversion in the Country today!

The Bund is an Organization of American Citizens unequivocally committed to the Defense of the Flag, Constitution and Sovereignty of these United States and therefore to the Defense of the right and duty to proportionate representation in the conduct of the Nation of more than 100,000,000 Aryan (WHITE GENTILE) Americans, as being the ONLY means of preserving the Independence and the Christian Culture and Civilization of this our Country![3]

Indeed this was the moment for the Bund to shine. Advertisements for the event attempted to woo the American public with tales of the Bund's success. Mass rallies at Nordland and Siegfried were attracting as many as 35,000-40,000 supporters. The Bund was growing, albeit modestly, in recognition and support by the American people, despite the fact that the mainstream press refused to report Bund successes and continued to attack the Bund. Tickets to the event cost from 40 cents to one dollar and ten cents ensuring the event would be a financial success. Bund advertisements listed the various businesses where tickets could be purchased.

The Deutscher Weckruf und Beobachter, the Free American, printed a variety of advertisements attesting to the American character of the Bund and its highly anticipated Madison Square Garden rally: "Why should not a German-American organization engage the Garden to attest its Americanism by honoring the memory of the Father of his Country…? Are not the members of the Bund American citizens? ...The German element has become an inseparable part of the blood, bone and sinew of Americanism."[4]

To avoid any confusion about the nature and character of the Bund and its rally, Bund publications addressed the frequently asked question: "Why don't Germans simply go back to Germany if they don't like the United States?" The Deutscher Weckruf und Beobachter, the Free American explained:

The great majority of the members of the Bund who came here from Germany have broken all ties with the mother land. They have made their homes here, built up a business and raised families of children prepared to do their duty. The answer is, We don't choose to go back because as substantial citizens, we have as much at stake in seeing that the United States is justly governed …We therefore choose to stay in order to protect our property, our wives and children from the fate of the Russian people. Why should we desert and leave the country we love to the mercy of its secret enemies and exploiters?[5]

It was evident that the event would be well attended and many anticipated vociferous anti-Nazi demonstrations, even riots. The New York police commissioner guaranteed 1,300 police to provide security, putting one-tenth of the entire New York City Police Department on duty in the area. In fact, anticipating a counter-demonstration and violence, a two-block perimeter was cordoned off and an additional 700 police were placed on hand to provide the much needed security. Shortly before the event began, police formed skirmish lines around the Garden. Surprisingly, of an anticipated 50,000 anti-Bund demonstrators, only about 300 showed up. They were boisterous and even attempted to penetrate the police lines but were largely ineffective in stopping the rally. One protester was arrested for cruelty to animals after he grabbed a police horse's bridle, injuring the animal. One block away, a loudspeaker blared "Be American and go home!"

Overall, the rally was executed in a relatively peaceful and organized manner. Police did arrest thirteen protesters who disturbed or attempted to disturb the rally, and those arrested were fined between two and ten dollars. The only major interruption during the rally itself was when Isadore Greenbaum, a Jew from Brooklyn, rushed the speaker's stand in a misguided attempt to attack Kuhn. The incident was captured on video and witnessed Greenbaum accosted and beaten by OD men before police hustled him away. Greenbaum was charged with disorderly conduct.

The event itself was a smashing success and represented a high water mark for the Bund. The Garden was elaborately decorated with both American and Bund flags and a massive thirty-foot tall full body portrait of George Washington dominated the stage. Flanking Washington's portrait were banners reading "Americans – Stop Jewish Domination of Christian America" and "Smash Jewish Communism." The aisles were lined with uniformed OD men and the evening opened with a parade of 3,000 uniformed OD men marching to a heavy drumbeat. When all were assembled, the crowd recited the Pledge of Allegiance, starting with the words, "I pledge undivided allegiance to the flag," followed by the singing of the Star Spangled Banner.[6] The Bund's national leadership was present and the keynote speakers included J. Wheeler Hill, the Bund's National Secretary, Reverend S. G. Van Bosse, a prominent minister from Philadelphia, George Froboese, Mid-Western Department Leader; Rudolf Markmann, Eastern Department Leader, G. Wilhelm Kunze, National Public Relations Director, and lastly, Fritz Kuhn, Bunds fuehrer. All of the speeches were given in English. As if on cue, the crowd cheered when Roosevelt was referred to as "Rosenfeld" and rose to a clamor each time a speaker shouted "Free America!" Mention of Father Coughlin and Charles Lindbergh also received enthusiastic applause.

The speeches began with the keynote address by Wheeler who opened with "My Fellow Christian Americans!" and proceeded to set the theme for the five speeches to follow. His speech rang of traditional American nativism. He began by quoting Washington's Farewell Address to demonstrate how such admonition was totally disregarded by Roosevelt's New Deal. He asked, "What would George Washington think and DO if he were alive today?" and concluded with a summary of the Bund's American ideals:

My Fellow Countrymen! WE German Americans are unequivocally committed to the defense of the Flag, Constitution and Sovereignty of our United States. WE STAND BEFORE YOU – loyal and law-abiding to be here dedicated together with you, to the great task of National and social reconstruction, and resolved as you are resolved to restore America to true Americans, and to the ideals and principles given expression in the great farewell address of George Washington. FREE AMERICA![7]

The next speaker was Markmann. In a speech entitled, "Reasons for the Bund's Existence," he defended the Bund against the slew of "slanderous lies" by the group's detractors and the biased press. To discredit the ceaseless charges that the group was a Nazi-directed organization with the aim of overthrowing America, he attempted to clarify the true purpose of the Bund:

We have never claimed to be and are not "Nazis" knowing very well that "Nazism," German National Socialism, is reserved for Germany and has no place in our Country, the United States of America! The German Chancellor has proclaimed to the world many times that National Socialism is not for export!

You have heard…our Bund is of sinister character, with the sole purpose of overthrowing the government of the U.S.A… Let me assure you right now that all such accusations are too silly to even require an attempted denial of any of them.[8]

Markmann then continued to explain how the Friends of the New Germany originated and how the Bund continued their fight against Jewish influence in America. He lamented the paucity of German-descended Americans in important political posts in the United States. He concluded by professing that the Bund would fight to properly represent this large segment of Americans. Makmann ended with a resounding, "FREE AMERICA!"[9]

Markmann was followed by Froboese, the Bund's economist, whose speech in many respects reflected German National Socialist ideals to much greater degree than the speeches of any of the other speakers. After addressing his "American Compatriots, Bund Members and Friends," Froboese began with a discussion of the "rights of the people." He explained, "We believe that the rights of the individual must stand second to well-being of the community and that the exigencies and requirements of such a community must be subordinated to such of the Nation! This all-embracing thought is our philosophy of a patriotic American Nationalism!"[10] His speech next turned to anti-Semitism in economics. The Bund, he declared, was opposed to "Jewish-Marxist class warfare" concocted by the "oriental cunning of the Jew Karl Marx-Mordecai!" He continued to explain that the Labor movement had failed because of "Jewish-International" interest and "Jewish agitators" who controlled labor unions yet knew nothing of them.[11] Moreover, the Bund advocated a free trade policy. Because of Jewish boycotts against German business, German-American trade suffered to the detriment of all hard-working Americans. He then attacked the internationalist character of the New Deal whose "Ham and Egg plans" were folly to American economics. America's financial system, he asserted, was internationally dominated and therefore Jewish dominated. As such, Froboese railed against the "international super state" while advocating a "National American Financial System." He proclaimed, "We know that the Jew is the most concerned with maintaining his stranglehold on the financial systems of the world….I call upon you to join with us in the battle for a socially just, economically stabilized, financially independent, Jew-free America!"[12]

The next speech was in fact written by Hermann Schwinn, the Bund's West Coast Leader, but because he was unable to appear, it was read by Gerhard Wilhelm Kunze, the Bund's public relations director and the man who ultimately replaced Kuhn as Bundsfuehrer. The speech was entitled "Religion, Culture," and it attacked the Jewish-liberal-Marxist domination of education and the arts. He began with a definition of Aryan virtues like "honesty, decency, courage, faith in the almighty, love of home and country, and the will to defend and preserve their foundations."[13] He explained that the Bund "take(s) no stand against ANY true church" and yet railed against ministers who aligned themselves with the Left and advocated liberal and Marxist ideologies.[14] Moreover, "School teachers SHOULD be made to swear to uphold the Constitution and at the first sign of any teaching leaning to the glorification of Bolshevism should be THROWN OUT! Jewish teachers should be eliminated from all schools for Gentiles."[15] Schwinn then accused American art as being Jewish dominated. Similarly, Hollywood was little more than an extension of "Jew York" which subtly glorified Jews, gangsters, drinking and high living while ridiculing old-fashioned American ways and ideals. Lastly Schwinn attacked the press as Jewish controlled and deliberately ignoring the menace of communism.

Kunze's speech, entitled "Race, Youth," demonstrated the clearest connection to the ideas of traditional American nativism and was perhaps the most scathing anti-Jewish diatribe of all. Kunze opened his speech as a teacher would, baiting his audience with the question, "Why are the Jews often seen as the enemies of mankind?" He then outlined the "law of Nature," explaining that God created various races. To "make believe that the profound, ineradicable racial differences between the Aryan and other races is to thwart the will of Nature, and to advocate the mixing of races is "Madness and Blasphemy!"[16] He then espoused the National Socialist idea that all great civilizations were the product of a particular race, and that history has shown that the decay and fall of all empires was due to race mixing and the adulteration of the genius of the original race. He declared, "There never has been and there can be no international or interracial culture! These United States also are the product of a particular racial group, the ARYAN!"[17] Slavs, Celts and Latins, he posited, all shared a fundamental political, economic, religious and cultural history and tradition with the Aryan, in contrast to the Jew, who was unassimilable and a "parasite on the body politic of our and other Aryan peoples!"[18] Despite this anti-Semitic harangue, he professed that the Bund was "not preaching race-hatred, but race-recognition and the will to the preservation of our own!" The Bund was not anti-anything and could live in peace with Blacks, Orientals and even Jews provided they kept apart.[19]

Kunze professed that because of their cunning, the Jews have come to dominate much of American society. The only way that the Aryan could reclaim the Nation was through "race-legislation of the United States to the point where those who may rule us, judge us, educate us or in any way direct our minds and souls MAY ONLY BE WHITE MEN!"[20] He explained that the Bund was not calling for anything new in American race legislation, citing America's history of intermarriage laws, the Asiatic Exclusion Act, Jim Crow laws, and immigration quotas. The Bund was calling for an extension of these existing laws to "protect the Aryan character of our Nation!" He elucidated, "We all, as White Men, have enough in common to build a political United Front, of which the German Element and its German American Bund want only to be a part!"[21] He explained that the Bund's adoption of the swastika and the Hitler salute were not out of loyalty to a foreign government but rather, the swastika was a race symbol and the salute symbolic of the Bund's ideals, which were no different than the salute of a host of other Aryan Nations. "This symbol and this salute represent the sign and recognition and the greetings of Aryans, White Gentiles, each of whom is a Nationalist and undividedly loyal to his own particular country, and in our case that means the United States of America."[22] Patriotism, Kunze concluded, was an Aryan virtue which must be taught and fostered in our children. His final words were: "White Men, learn what responsibility to yourself and your people's future mean! Recognize your heritage! Join us! FREE AMERICA!"[23]

Last came the main event of the evening; Fritz Kuhn. While each of the previous speakers acted as teachers, each explaining some aspect of the Bund's functions, Kuhn spoke of action.

He outlined the Bund's role in contemporary America and explained what it must do to destroy its and America's enemies. Kuhn strutted to the podium and offered a calm "Free America!" and prepared to speak. He began with some humor, "You have heard of me through the Jewish-controlled press and a creature with horns, a cloven hoof and a long tail."[24] He then ridiculed the rumors of his connection with Hitler or Goebbels and accusation that came from the ravings of Rabbi Wise, Untermyer and Dickstein.

Kuhn then proceeded to explain, just as Deutscher Weckruf und Beobachter, the Free American advertisements had, the answer to the question, "Why don't Germans simply go back to Germany if they don't like it in America?" Again he explained that the Bund was made of American citizens who have made America their permanent home and sought to protect it from Jews and communists. The problem with Americans of German descent was that although they were the second largest ethnic group in America, they were silenced by the Great War, receiving treatment "nothing short of persecution and a reign of terror." Thus, the Bund was formed to give German-Americans their rightful place in American society.

Kuhn next launched into his tirade against the Jews, wherein he gave a radical revisionist history lesson in order to demonstrate how the Jews have historically been traitors to America. Kuhn here was not at his best; the speech was a bit long winded and nebulous. He explained that Haym Salomon and David Salisbury Frank (Benedict Arnold's adjutant), two Jews who were commonly glorified as American heroes, were in fact scoundrels. Salomon never loaned America anything and Frank was a traitor. Moreover, during the Civil War, General Grant, "in defiance of the powerful influence of the financial Jews in the North, issued a general order on December 19, 1862, forbidding Jews to enter the Union lines. It forbade Jews to be found within 60 miles of the front."[25] Kuhn's American history lesson next focused on a Jew named Frank Moses, the "worst carpetbagger of them all" who, using Black support, ravaged South Carolina and created racial problems which prompted the creation of the Ku Klux Klan. His last attack was against Bernard K. Baruch who "swindled the United States into the Great War on the side of Britain thereby buying Palestine for the Zionists." Kuhn finished his speech by repudiating the "slanderous charges" against the Bund and reiterating the eight point program of the Bund.[26]

Exiting from the hall, many Bundists returned to Yorkville where they celebrated. The rally was an enormous success. Kuhn proclaimed, "All America is speaking of the Bund," and he was right.[27]

White man's burden

The Bund had obtained enormous publicity. Newspapers reported on the rally and newsreels in theaters around the Nation showed highlights of the event. The Bund believed that Americans would now believe, understand and respect its message of patriotism. Bundists took faith that perhaps now they could shed the popular perception that they were a subversive alien "fifth column." However, this was not so. Although the Madison Square Garden rally marked the acme of the Bund, it also in many ways marked the beginning of the end for the group as government agencies bent on the destruction of the Bund took even more drastic and desperate measures against the organization.

Alex Jones fails to discredit the Duke

True believers in Alex Jones, the radio talk show host grown famous for demolishing those whose ideas many don't accept, want more on his August 18 miscalculation this time. Here are a few excerpts.

katana17.wordpress.com

Jones: I'm just going to be completely honest, as I'm always am, teleprompter free. Telling it like it is. I'm going to be completely honest with why I have got Dr. David Duke, the former Klu Klux Klan Grand Dragon, joining us for the full hour, into the next hour, if he will stay with us…

So David Duke of davidduke.com, joins us. If you want us to do your bio, everyone knows about your PhD in history, author of a bunch of best selling books and have been a Grand Dragon Wizard, and all the rest of it. I'm not going to start making jokes about that, but I thank you so much for joining us today and I hope we can have a good debate here.

Duke: Well, I hope so and if you give me a chance to talk that would be great and I look forward to a real discussion about some of the basic issues, because I'd like to get down to the bottom today, of who the real elite is in this country and the world that is truly, as you say, and it's totally true, they're an enemy of all mankind. And I think for them, and you even said this as well in the first part of the show, is that they want to, in some ways go against European peoples because they want to control the West and the power of the West. And I think that's why we are in these wars in the Middle East, really wars for Israel, and wars for the globalist powers…

Jones: But the West funded the rise of Hitler. The West signed a secret treaty that has been basically released by the British to back Hitler in a takeover of Europe. They had Edward the eighth ready to be the new king of Europe. They double-crossed, but that doesn't mean that Hitler is good. It means that she again, the West, England, British intelligence, along with some of the U. S., was setting things up. Now take Prescott Bush, the head Nazi agent in the U. S. And their plan for a coup with Smedley Butler. I mean, there is all this other stuff going on.

Duke: I don't think he had agents in the United States at all. I'm sorry, but I believe the information you have there is false. Maybe it's planted by the people who [spread] disinformation. The truth is, that there is no evidence at all that Western Nations supported the rise of Hitler, or any of the gentile establishments in America. The Jews were…

Jones: He was on the cover of Time magazine! My grandfather remembers hearing him in Dallas. They would air him on the radio.

Duke: They did not promote Adolf Hitler. If you look at the New York Times, and our media in America, even back then the New York Times was dominated… The Jewish publication, the Sulzbergers, had article after article every day of our lives about how evil the Germans were. There were a lot of lies about the Germans, too. The fact is, that there was no greater, the internationalists saw no greater enemy, than Germany in the Second World War. And both the Zionists on one side, the Zionist Jews on one side, which influenced the West, as Charles Lindbergh pointed out, and Communist Jews on the other side, supported Marxism. We knew…

Jones: So everything is the Jews' fault? Do you really believe that?

Duke: It's not all the Jew's fault. But you got to understand, they have, they have a complete domination of our media, our academia. They have a complete…

Jones: Well David Duke, a history PhD and former Grand Wizard, Grand Dragon, I… Grand Cyclops? I don't know. I'm sorry, I just think it's so funny… Where did all this "dragon, goblins, Cyclops" stuff come from? And were you a "goblin Cyclops" before you were a dragon?

Duke: No, I never was a goblin, never a Cyclops, but I am a European American who realized at a very young age that we were going to become monitored in our own country, that we were going to lose our rights and privileges, including our gun rights. And I've seen a lot of destruction of those rights over the years and they are going to continue to go. And as our country goes and as the power of the media goes to brainwash our people and to degenerate our people, all that is going to continue. As I was a young man I saw this writing on the wall. I didn't win any popularity contest by joining a nonviolent Klan organization, and I thought I could recover the image. Because, originally, the Klan as many camps said in books north and south restored the freedom, really, of the Southern people and the decency of what's going on in the South, and a very horrible reconstruction period, where European Americans were stripped of all their voting rights. And they were done so without any due process…

Jones: So David Duke is basically saying to a great extent there is a worldwide Jewish conspiracy, that's behind the New World Order, to push these agendas. So I would ask the question, would civilization have any problems if the Jews were all sent in a space capsule to another planet?…

And it's fine, David, people can go to davidduke.com and see your videos and your talking points, and the things that you talk about. And I've heard most of this from other people of your ilk…

When David Duke, left, answered Lion of Judah Alex Jones's challenge to debate him, sparks flew.

Duke: Give me my 10 minutes, please. This is one quarter of our people being lost. I also believe this is a pattern of promotion, you talked about all this promotion, a good example of this sexual degeneracy, the lesbian and gay agenda and so forth, I can show you, I can prove it to anyone's satisfaction, it is practically, totally, it is 98% dominated and controlled by Jewish extremists; and, by the way, they support Israel; these same extremists support Israel which doesn't even allow marriage between a man and a man or a woman and a woman. They don't allow it in Israel. But every major Jewish organization in America, you can go to the Council of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations, which is a real organization; it has a budget of billions of dollars. All these groups…every…that group puts a policy and they support gay marriage, they support gun control of the American people you talked about earlier in the show… the Israelis were promoting gun control for America, they support gun control… every major Jewish organization in the United States of America. Let me show another graphic here; this is from the movie Django which was produced by the Weinstein brothers… a perfect example of what is going on in this country… This is a quotation from the movie Django, which has the Black hero saying, "Kill White people and get paid for it, what's not to like?"

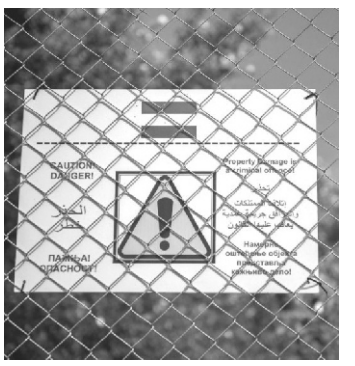
A group of invading immigrants cut through the border fence as shown at right and entered the country illegally. Police captured them all and will put each of those lawbreakers on trial. It is surmised that the perpetrators had received instructions and were coached and supplied with the tools to be able to get past that fence.

Such signs warn all migrants about the consequences of illegally crossing the border.

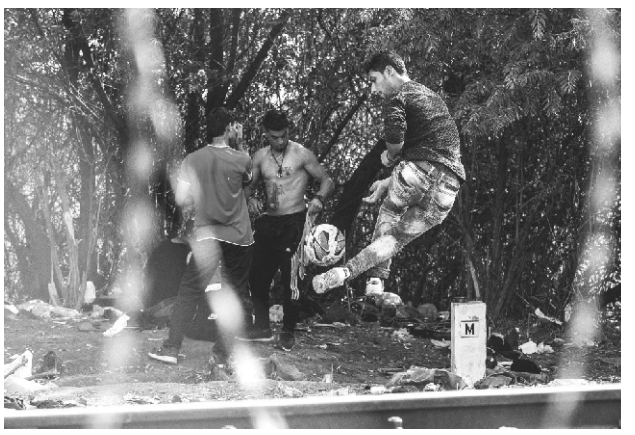


The government closed the Röszke-Horgos border crossing, and migrants are enraged.

Migrants are viewed here sleeping at the Röszke-Horgos border crossing, which authorities have now closed to traffic.

Migrants stuck on the Serbian side of the border are here holding signs that say "No Food." Those running the show probably coached and supplied them with these signs.

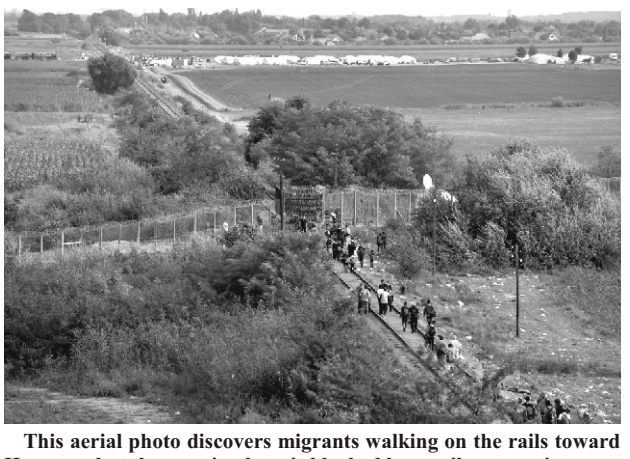
Troops and police officers captured this group of migrants having crossed the border illegally.



Migrants are passing time by playing football near Röszke on the Serbian side of the border.

It seems the cabal has mobilized all of its assets in Hungary and the neighboring countries to attack the Hungarian government for having closed the border with Serbia. Ferenc Gyurcsany, as already stated, is on the scene, with other foreign agents and NGOs. They have even sent agent provocateurs from Austria to heckle Jobbik MP Z. Kárpát Dániel, who held a press conference near the border. Police are seen here taking into custody one of the Austrian agents provocateur.

The Hungarian government has now decided to extend the border barrier into the Romanian stretch of the Hungarian border near Létavértes. The border fence already completed on the Hungarian-Serbian border will extend for "a reasonable distance" to protect the Hungarian border with Romania, as just announced by the foreign ministry in Budapest. Most probably the Hungarian Intelligence Agency had learned that those perpetrators who run this worldwide mass migration program want to open a new route through Romania circumventing all these barriers on the Hungarian-Serbian border.



This aerial photo discovers migrants walking on the rails toward Hungary, but the crossing here is blocked by a railway carriage.

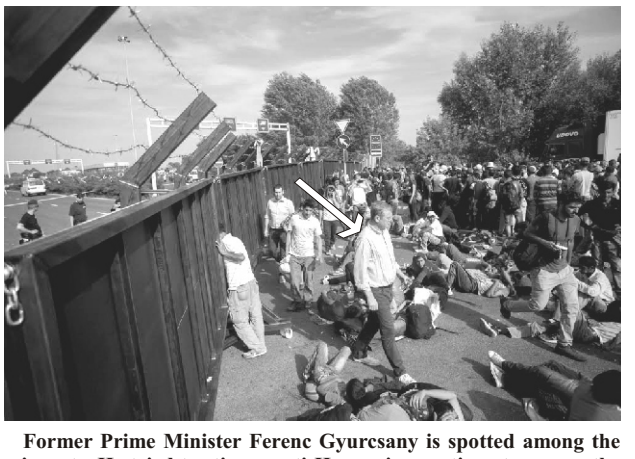
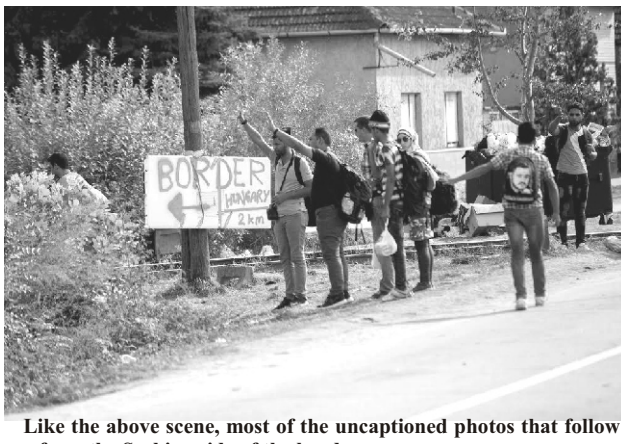
Former Prime Minister Ferenc Gyurcsany, the leader of the most notorious globalist gang in Hungary called Democratic Coalition, and some gang members agitate migrants and incite hatred against the Hungarian government near Röszke.



Former Prime Minister Ferenc Gyurcsany is spotted among the migrants. He tried to stir up anti-Hungarian sentiments among the migrants, instigating them to keep up their pressure on the border guards. He said no one could stop these people. But Hungary did…



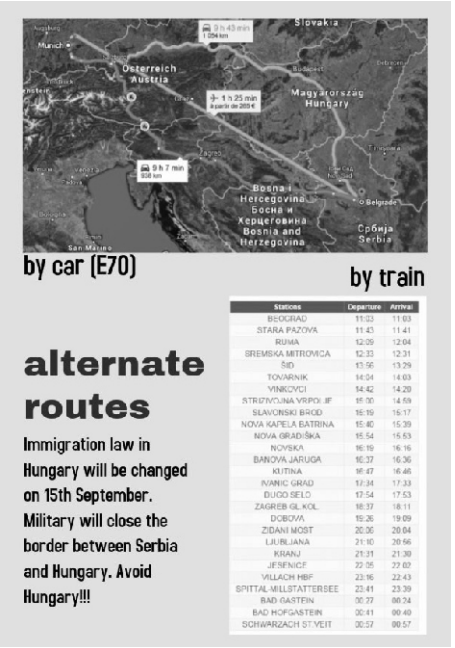
Like the above scene, most of the uncaptioned photos that follow are from the Serbian side of the border.

Serbian Foreign Minister Ivica Dacic said it was unacceptable that other States send migrants back into Serbia, while the transits just keep coming into his country.

"Serbia does not wish to aggravate the refugee crisis, and would like a negotiated solution; it refuses to become a sole victim of the situation," said the foreign minister while in Prague. The minister was referring to the closure of the border between Hungary and Serbia.

Serbian media were reporting that all of the migrant buses had been redirected to the Serbian border with Croatia. The blic.rs website reported more than 20 buses were waiting at the Presovo station ready to transport thousands of migrants to the Croatian-Serbian border. It was not yet clear who had ordered and paid for the buses, Serbia's government or private individuals.

The three lower shots show migrants stuck on the Serbian side of the border.



Hungary starts building fence on Croatian border

Just a minute! Was not Hungary the Nation whose warriors turned back that earlier Ottoman invasion before the very gates of Vienna?

dw.com

Prime Minister Viktor Orban says a new fence is already being built on the Croatian border to stem all this migrant pressure. Croatia had closed its border with Serbia after being deluged with refugees over several days.

Orban announced that construction had begun on the new fence, similar to those barriers erected recently along its border with Serbia. The confirmation came hours after Croatia shut its boundary with Serbia, as the migrant crisis marched westwards.

Speaking on national radio, Orban said a fast-solution fence would be finished in short order on that critical 41-kilometer stretch of the frontier where Hungary and Croatia are not divided by a river.

It is not clear whether or when the new structure will eventually span the entire 329 kilometer (204 mile) long boundary.

"We must implement the same measures as on the Serbian-Hungarian border," he hinted, adding that 600 soldiers were working on the fence, a further 500 would be deployed the next day and 700 more over the weekend.

Legal obligations met

Orban vowed that despite blockading its borders, the country would keep to the Geneva Convention "and all other treaties governing refugee treatment."

Hungary's first anti-migrant fence is 3.5-meters (11.4 feet) high, and had been finished earlier last month along its 175-kilometer border with Serbia. Since its completion, Hungary has blocked any and all migrant entry and imposed draconian penalties for illegal crossing.

Thousands of people traveled to the Serbian border with Croatia, attempting to reach northern European countries.

The strict new measures having led to clashes between police and protesters on the Serbian border, officers had unleashed tear gas and water cannon onto the crowd leaving several people in need of medical attention.

Faced with the new blockade, thousands of migrants then performed a detour over the next few days, heading for Serbia's border with Croatia, still hoping to cross through Hungary or Slovenia on their way to northern Europe.

Croatia can't cope

But Croatia then shut seven of eight road border crossings with Serbia after more than 11,000 refugees overwhelmed the frontier over two days. Serbian officials protested the move, fearing that the closure would leave thousands of migrants stranded inside its own territory.

Earlier, authorities in Zagreb said they would not prevent people crossing through the country on their way to other E. U. States, but Croatian Prime Minister Zoran Milanovic warned his country's resources for dealing with the influx were "limited."

Several hundred people headed to the Croatian capital after being trapped for hours at a small rural train station at Tovarnik near the border, waiting for transport.

Slovenia stopped a train from Croatia carrying migrants, saying that some 150 passengers did not have correct documents and would be returned to Zagreb. All rail services between the two countries have been stopped.

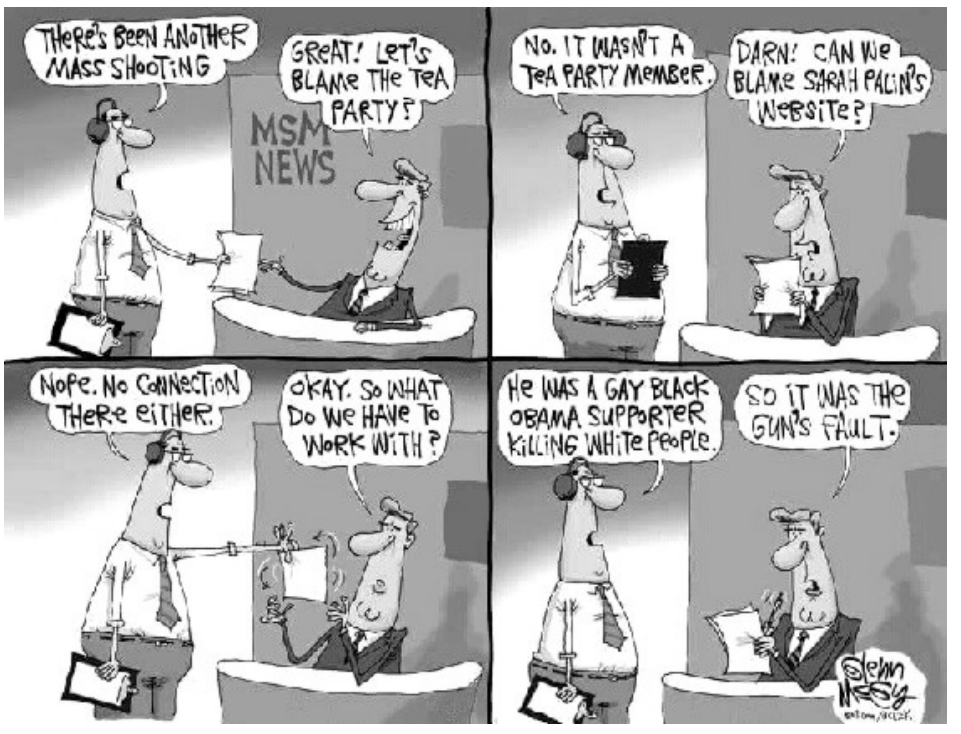
Bankster "diplomacy"

In a thinly-veiled attack aimed at Hungary, German Economy Minister Sigmar Gabriel warned that that E. U. money would not be allocated to countries that "don't share our values."

He said while Germany was opening gymnasiums, barracks and homes to refugees, other countries were "laying barbed wire on their borders and closing the gates."

E. U. leaders held an emergency summit the following week on the migrant crisis, amid growing calls for Turkey to be given additional resources to keep more Syrian refugees on its soil until its neighbor's war ends.

French President Francois Hollande said leaders would also discuss the setting up of "hotspots" or registration centers for asylum seekers.



Foolish sanctions finally lifted

Iranian President Hassan Rouhani says the recent nuclear agreement between Tehran and the P5+1 group of countries will benefit the region and the world.

On September 24, Rouhani hailed as a great achievement the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), which was reached between Iran and the six other countries in July, saying Tehran "intends to implement the JCPOA in the best possible way."

Rouhani made the remarks at Mehrabad Airport before leaving the Iranian capital city of Tehran for New York to attend the 70th session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Iran and the P5+1 countries – the U. S., Russia, China, France, Britain and Germany – had finalized the JCPOA in the Austrian capital city of Vienna on July 14.

Iranian President Rouhani boards a plane at Mehrabad Airport in the Iranian capital city of Tehran to leave for New York, September 24, 2015.

The U. N. Security Council on July 20 unanimously endorsed a draft resolution turning the JCPOA into international law.

Under the JCPOA, limits will be put on Iran's nuclear activities in exchange for, among other things, the removal of all economic and financial sanctions against the Islamic Republic.

The reason for revolution

By J. B. Campbell
americandefenseparty.com

I've been a hard-core revolutionary since 1983, since writing a militia-starting book. Not that there was anything revolutionary about the militia, since that body was originally designed to give support to law enforcement to put down super-lawlessness.

And, without the old militia, George Washington would not have been able to defeat the English, as he reluctantly admitted. He preferred the march-or-die army over some guys who might split if the fighting didn't make sense. The way generals tend to spend lives, it usually doesn't.

The more I learned about the militia the less I liked it. The militia was an enemy of freedom during the Whiskey Rebellion in Pennsylvania as well as Shays' Rebellion in Massachusetts. Alexander Hamilton instigated the Whiskey Rebellion in typical Federalist fashion by putting a tax on booze, of all things. George Washington and his stinking Federalists exploited Shays' Rebellion to overthrow the Articles of Confederation and form a federal empire under the Constitution.

I only used the word "militia" because of the abuse of it by judges in the disarmament and imprisonment of American gun owners, thanks to the terrible and contradictory wording of the 2nd Amendment, which has served to confuse and misdirect us since 1791. It has done this by tying gun carrying with membership in a pretty much non-existent militia. By 1903, the "organized militia" was merged with the army under its new name, the National Guard. But that didn't stop crooked judges from wondering how on earth this revolver could be part of a well-regulated militia? And sending its owner to prison.

In 1918, the Supreme Court said that it was okay to draft militiamen and send them to kill and be killed overseas. I became a revolutionary when I read about that.

What I was really trying to do with the militia movement was to start a revolution against both the federal government and private government by tying gun ownership with a hatred of those two forms of control that have robbed us of our freedom, many of our lives, our treasure and almost all of our common sense.

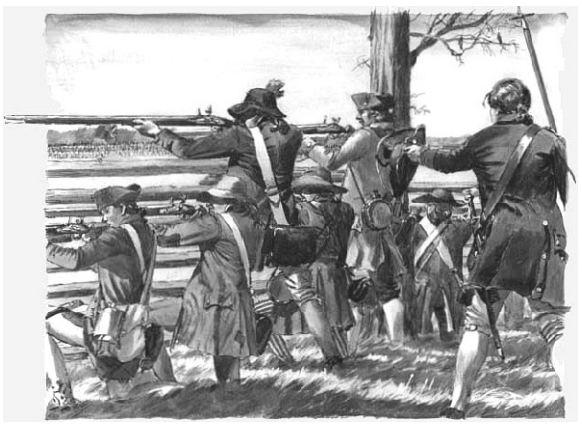
But, in the '80s and '90s, this was not to be. Americans hadn't learned sufficiently to hate the official and private governments. The vast majority of Americans couldn't see the problem, which didn't get really obvious until the meltdown of 2008, with the financial collapse and that bailout of the billionaires. Then it started getting obvious. Still, no Egyptian moment.

What will it take to get to our Egyptian moment? I think I have the answer.

Now, as this is being written, a couple of nuclear power plants located on the overflowing Missouri River in Nebraska are at risk of going Fukushima. One of these, the Cooper Nuclear Station, is the same as the Fukushima reactor. The Fort Calhoun reactor is a pressurized water type rather than a boiling water type and it has likely already begun to self-destruct from the rising flood waters and fires in the switch gear room.

I'm not saying that we're going to start hanging our CFR aristocrats over a couple of carcinogenic meltdowns, though it would be sufficient cause. The nuclear power industry was foisted on us by the same folks who dropped nuclear bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, who exploded hundreds of nukes in the atmosphere and in the ocean for twenty-five years. They conned us into believing that nuclear power was clean and safe and it did seem that way until the equipment started wearing out.

But what we didn't know was the price paid by the guys who brought the uranium out of the ground, mostly American Indians in the Southwest who didn't know how deadly the stuff was because the federal government didn't tell them. The feds didn't tell them because they wanted to make bombs. Then they wanted to make power. The ends justify the means with these guys. Eventually there was so much depleted uranium waste at the power plants that the feds decided to make bullets and artillery rounds of it, for penetrating power due to its density. The real reason was that there was no other lucrative way to dispose of it.



Unconscionable

The effects of depleted uranium dust on humans are so catastrophic that it was the perfect excuse for a revolution against the warlords of Washington.

Still, if nukes make the lights go on and the AC blow cold, that was good enough for Americans, until more recently. The Germans, the Swiss and the Italians have seen the light and decided to shut down their nuclear reactors. The Japanese, nuked three times in sixty-six years, will probably do the same, if they live that long.

But that's not going to make us into revolutionaries.

There's something else.

All these people in Europe running around and getting tear-gassed and beat up are doing it because their money's shot. Their treacherous governments decided to abandon their francs and lira and pesos and marks and drachmas and all go in on a common currency called the Euro, issued by the privately-owned European Central Bank. This company is owned by the same people who own "our" Federal Reserve System.

Just as Alexander Hamilton and the Federalists, in 1787, wanted a central government and a usurious central bank to lend to it at interest, the very same family for which he worked created the central government called the European Union back in 1987 and its companion central bank.

Neo-Federalists

A few years ago I reported that this very same family intended to do the very same thing here, with something called the North American Union, our version of the European Union. The NAU will be the merger of Canada, Mexico and the U. S. and the new currency will be called not the Euro but the Amero.

Now, in Europe, the Euro is collapsing because of the nature of private ownership of the currency and credit of all those former Nations which are now just units in the European Union. When a private company is in charge of a country's money, and is for some reason allowed to create that money out of thin air and lend it and charge interest on it, the country eventually goes broke. The reason for this is the interest paid to the private company, which does not issue enough currency to pay the interest.

That is, if everyone has to pay back more than he borrows, where does the extra come from? Answer: it doesn't. When everyone has to pay back more than he borrows (interest), the private company must inflate its supply of money, which it is happy to do for a while. Then, when the time is right, the company begins to deflate, to collect the cash and destroy it.

When the new shortage of money hits the people, they cannot repay more than they borrowed and they lose the things they borrowed to buy. The private company "repossesses" the real and private property after putting up nothing in the first place. The loans were make-believe, but the pay-back is real.

So, based on what we see happening in Greece and Ireland and Spain and Iceland and Portugal and spreading to the more prosperous countries with the fraudulent currency called the Euro, we need to avoid this further economic disaster which would be worse than the one in which we already find ourselves.

Back in 2006, the thought of a new currency called the Amero seemed paranoid. Just because you're paranoid doesn't mean they ain't gonna get you. A conspiracy theory stops being a theory when the CFR promotes it.

Foreign Affairs magazine is the house organ of the Council on Foreign Relations. A plan is devised and presented at a Bilderberg meeting, such as the recent one in St. Moritz. Next, the plan is revealed in the pages of Foreign Affairs magazine for the enlightened ones to read and follow.

Ben Steil, director of international economics at the Council on Foreign Relations, wrote an article in the May/June 2007 issue of Foreign Affairs entitled "The End of National Currency." In this piece he promoted what would be the Amero.

"National currencies and global markets simply do not mix. In order to globalize safely, countries should abandon monetary nationalism and abolish unwanted currencies."

And this idea logically followed from another CFR think piece from 2005 by the godfather of the North American Union, Robert Pastor. He calls it "a North American community approach to security!"

New World Orderlies

So you can plainly see that the North American Union and its companion currency, the Amero, are quite real. The NAU was supposed to have taken over by now but then it was announced that a later date would find us without northern or southern borders as we have known them. Mexican and Canadian police and soldiers would be sharing law enforcement duties with our friendly SWAT teams. You know, the homicidal jerks playing neighborhood soldiers?

This, friends, is a reason for revolution. There is no nice way to put it. As I have often written, the American revolution against tyranny must begin with destroying this malignant, megalo-maniacal collection of dictators the headquarters of which is at the corner of 68th Street and Park Avenue in Manhattan.

Every disaster, every invasion and occupation, every financial catastrophe known to modern man has originated in this den of iniquity. How have they gotten away with it? Simple: they invited the newspaper and television execs to join the club. David Rockefeller had the gall to thank his friends in the press who never said a word about the meetings they'd attended. He admitted that, without their help, the New World Order could not have succeeded.

Does it need to be said that corrupt newsmen will be decorating bridges, trees and lampposts around the country? Those characters had a sacred duty to report what they knew and they deliberately betrayed us. All of what's coming could have been avoided if the newsmen had told the truth. We could have handled it. Instead, we were fed a pack of lies. And now, everybody gets to pay the price.

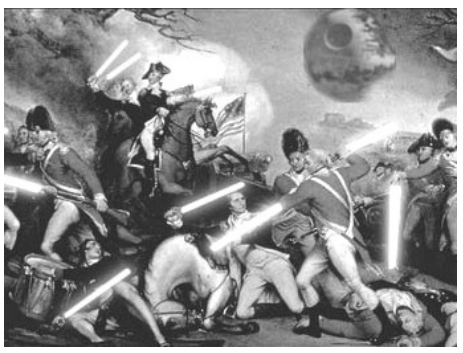
At some point, which is coming soon, Americans are going to deal with this treason. Some of us are going to deal with it on back roads and in the cities, against the agents of the North American Union. These agents will of course be in uniform to make them appear official and legitimate. They will be official but they will not be legitimate.

Killers

But, even right now, our homegrown terrorists are wearing uniforms paid for by us, carrying weapons paid for by us and invading peaceful homes and killing people just like us inside our homes, for no reason. Or in our cars or just walking down the street. These clowns are getting away with murder. This alone is a reason for revolution. It is far worse than the British behavior leading up to Lexington, which was extremely bad. But today it's worse. Some of these guys, maybe most of them, derive gratification from inflicting pain and death on us.

So some of us will deal with official intimidation the way Americans are equipped to deal with it. Others of us will deal with the treason described above, both official and private. We will deal with what confronts us, wherever it confronts us.

This is not the militia movement of the 1980s and '90s. That idea died at Oklahoma City in 1995. The militia was just a semi-militant state of mind and a big stockpiling of guns and ammo. It was what we might call a good start. The name and the idea should be abandoned, since there are so many federal agents masquerading as "militiamen."



What we are going to do is resist. The tyrants are going to be destroyed. Big tyrants and little tyrants and tyrants in between. They've been having their way with us for various reasons. Mind control, diet, poisoned water, drugs, whatever. We haven't been authorized to take them down.

Back to basics

The most radical thing I did with the militia was to point out that we don't need authorization to defend ourselves. We have the natural right to defend ourselves and our loved ones and our friends. Once a deadly threat is detected, we have the natural right to defend with deadly force. We don't care about legal rights anymore, because there are no dependable legal rights. Only the police and the military have legal rights to kill us and decent people everywhere. They use those rights to torture and murder with impunity.

Our authorization is the North American Union, which is an official declaration of war against the American people. Now that we know what is planned for us, that our own government is at war with us as surely as it is at war with Pakistan, we can respond in kind.

Conspirators

Unbeknownst to most Americans, in 2011 Barack Obama and Canada's Stephen Harper signed a declaration that put in place a new national security arrangement defined not by U. S. national borders but by a continental view of a "North American perimeter" based on Robert Pastor's CFR monster called the North American Union.

You realize, of course, this means war. The peaceful solution is to nationalize the Federal Reserve and have the Congress issue debt-free currency, which would kick the North American Union right in the head. But, to get there, we're probably going to have to do it the hard way, which would be Sic Semper Tyrannis.

VOTE ONE MORE TIME

Repeating the same action over and over while expecting different results is insanity they say. If this is true then over half of all Americans are just plain nuts! Consider: Election after election we angrily vote the Republican Party out of office, replacing them with the Democratic Party – or vice versa – while expecting different results. Yet, election after election, we are sadly disappointed, as nothing really changes… except perhaps to get worse. When are we going to acknowledge the fallacy of simply "voting" for positive change, thinking that one or the other of these two political clubs will deliver on its promises? When do we try something different, and new?

We know both of these political parties have repeatedly demonstrated – through political favors – that their allegiance is to financial supporters, not their constituents. Time and again we've witnessed how both the Republican and Democratic politicians play ball with their campaign contributors (America's wealthy 1%) at the expense of the American people. No matter which of these two parties we elect, it's the wealthy 1%-ers who win every election, not us!

Now comes time for some real change. Since our courts will not allow us to take "big money" out of politics ("campaign contributions," PACs, etc.), we ought to boycott the two corrupted political parties. We need to quit wasting our votes on the Republican and Democratic parties, and vote for candidates who shun "big money" and its corruption. It's time for Americans to retake control of our nation and destiny! Let us vote for independent candidates!

REVOLUTION NOW

Looking at the Confederate flag rallies, to make them effective you must prevent their being co-opted the same way George Wallace betrayed segregationism and push such gatherings into being revolutionary. This means incessantly attacking, driving out anyone who isn't one of us – Zionists, anti-racists, "moderate" conservatives and Republicans. If such people are allowed to control this flag movement, they will turn accommodationist and make it a nullity, a step back for two forward.

As a National Socialist, I would want to push the concept of a White, Southern, National Socialist State foremost without compromise. This means attack – verbally, politically – anyone who tries to distance the flag from "racism," hate, even Dylann Roof himself. These events can heighten tensions and hopefully provoke tension-increasing acts.

The idea is to promote a total rejection of the American government, its culture and ideologies, as something loathsome, hateful, alien to the Southern Nation.

WHISPERED NAUSEA

I am sick and tired of being bombarded by this symbol of the Stars and Bars with a big circle and slash running through it, indicating "NO!" The accompanying crap identifies the Confederate flag as a "hate symbol," when indeed it is not. The true hate symbols are all those fires, the looting, shooting, brickbats being thrown, rioting, senseless attacks on Whites and other non-Blacks, raping, cop-stalking, innocent lives being snuffed out, police intimidation, senseless lawsuits – the list goes on and on, ad nauseum…

I am sick also of the term "racist" being applied only to White people. It seems to me that the biggest and most absurd users of this word are the Black trilobites. The word applies to them. If you want a word describing the White folk, it would have to instead be a phrase. May I suggest: Fed Up. Arming for a Revolution. Time to Retake the Country from Gorilla Warfare (and no, that's not a typo). I'm sure you readers can think of plenty more to describe the rising intolerance for these sub-humans.

COMPARISON

Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar put out an edict in 2001 against un-Islamic, graven images. As a result, the Taliban then destroyed the Bamigan Buddhas statues in Afghanistan – 1,500 years of antiquity and an international art treasure.

The Confederate memorial carving in Georgia is the largest high-relief sculpture in the world and also an international art treasure. Let us be open-minded enough to see beauty in both the Confederates and Buddhas as works of art. I would like to think humanity is not so low that viewing a painting or sculpture might easily spur us to hatred, intolerance and crime.

The Atlanta NAACP is calling for the destruction of the Confederate memorial carving because it finds that monument "offensive." Isn't destroying carvings that some find offensive what the Taliban did in Afghanistan and Islamic State is even now doing in Syria and Iraq?

While we've had many horrible things happen in U. S. history, including the War of Northern Aggression, getting rid of all the evidence and every symbol can never change history. Do we simply act like this historical event didn't happen? Let's learn from the past and then move on.

M.L.K. BOULEVARD

Recently they removed the statue of Confederate President Jefferson Davis from the University of Texas campus in Austin. That I expected. What I didn't expect was that those Leftists would also "disappear" the U. S. President Woodrow Wilson statue from there as well.

I guess Wilson's being a Southern White man outweighs his many accomplishments in the cause of World Socialism.

There's also a move afoot to rename the national capitol, on the grounds that George Washington

(A) was a Southern White man,

(B) owned hundreds of Black slaves on his plantation and

(C) grew tobacco. (Horrors!)

The Left even has a new name all picked out – Black City. Black City? Couldn't they do better than that? How about something with a little class? Like New Nairobi or, better yet, Negrotopia?

NOT OURS

As you can see from Section 1 of the 14th Amendment, disregarding whatever else we Southerners may think of it, in the six words "and subject to the jurisdiction thereof," the writers of that amendment never, never, ever intended illegals and their offspring to be included in this phrase of that opening sentence. On the contrary, they (the illegals) were considered to be subject to the jurisdiction of that country from which they came, and this applied as well to their offspring. JOHN ALTMAN

DETAILS, PLEASE

On page 10 [TFF September 2015] one finds very little info on the debate between David Duke and Alex Jones, but a lot of bashing and name calling. How about some of the debate printed out? Alex has his faults as we all do, but he has awakened millions including me, when interviewing some of the same great guests as appear in the pages of your great paper. I don't see how this infighting and name calling in our "wake up" movement helps.

FCI Englewood, Colorado, has returned our August 2015 issues sent to subscribers Blair Arroyo and Jayson Dahl because:

"On page 8, it speaks of how the White race should wave the Confederate flag and bring down the American flag that stands for race mixing and Jewish supremacy. It also states that the Confederate flag stands for White people resisting.

"On page 12, it speaks of Negroes and Jewish political and corporate handlers starting the race war and when White people start pushing back, they will regret starting the war."

Please review these articles in context at www.firstfreedom.net/1708.pdf and note that their unfashionable truths advocate no dishonorable behavior. TFF does not meet the politically-correct standards of today's lockstep mediacracy but, can you imagine the significance of totalitarian agreement on every subject? One poet penned it thus:

Treason doth never prosper; what's the reason? For, if it prosper, none dare call it treason.

Neither you nor I wish to lose our own decision-making powers as to what we'll eat, drink, smoke – or read. One can easily imagine some mail room clerks smarting at that image of a Confederate flag on page 1, but please suggest to them that the liberal media's rumors about its truth declining are exaggerated. Knowing ourselves is less easy than defining the enemy

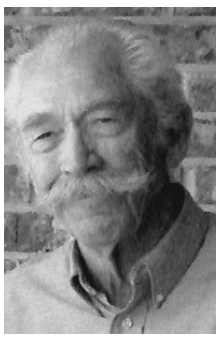
editor@firstfreedom.net

The guilt complex is dead. That doesn't say we Aryans have "liberated" ourselves, Soviet-style, from all pangs of conscious when putting a false face on whatever is thereby more likely to meet approval or sell. It merely means the xenohomophobe bit, racist and other such labels as media munchkins flatter us with just don't work anymore. A survivor who has outlasted their word games stands immune to further psychobabble. The war is over, rainbow flaggers, you lose; we care not what you're addicted to in private, but keep away from our children or get hurt. Waving multicolored sheets is acceptable, as nobody offends people simply because they have magenta, green or purple skin; yet it's only too obvious that many another difference exposes government-enforced integration as tyranny against all. So don't push it too far. Also, you might return the favor of our "tolerance" by ending those attacks on the battle flag. It's here to stay.



Full disclosure

Truth be told, there's at least some hint of larceny, superbia and deceit in all of us. Where is the Diogenes who can look into a mirror and not primp to make that face or attire more presentable? The lawyer argues toward victory, not justice. Most preachers would rather convert with their own wits than emulate Socrates by zeroing in on the subject's. Merchants wish to sell, so don't bother them for advice about competitors dealing in similar wares.

Dreamers notwithstanding, none of this, that is, nature, will change. A fool and his inheritance are soon parted; wilderness at its rawest, whether in the jungle or District of Calumnity, proves as much. It could not be otherwise. The pendulum ever returns to a balance between herbivorous deer and carnivorous hunter. When docile taxpayers salute the stalkers, those who never owned them in the first place will "repossess" their homes. Among such prey, however, in all instances are at least some who will prove more adept at survival. To them we owe much credit for repeatedly belling that cat.

Munchkins may claim inflation is under control, free trade and licentious behavior are keeping the economy humming while the dollar is good as paper, but there's more than larceny, superbia and deceit at work here. Yes, a "pound" cake or package of ice cream costs little more than last year, but, haven't you noticed? Those items weigh less and their containers are smaller. It's a clever means for postponing the reckoning maybe a little longer. Nature is patient. Colgate puts its 8 tall tube of toothpaste in a 9 long box, Dial's ½ thick soap bar is contorted to fill a 1 high wrapper and we hear Lay's will pay $10,000 to whoever curls one potato chip to fluff out an entire bag.

Brazen come-ons

The consumer gets what he pays for or will tolerate, thanks to shysters like Morris Dees, Abe Foxman and the first man who priced his gasoline at nineteen-point-nine cents a gallon, stealing customers from that twenty cent station down the street till the competitor did likewise. Drivers fueling up today still pay the millions this point-nine signage costs them at advantage to no one except those manufacturing the means for signaling a temporary price alongside that enduring, almost-but-not-quite extra cent.

What, fellow countrymen and women, has become of us? Are we all participants in these crimes against honest presentation simply because, otherwise truthful but lazy when "fitting in," electing comfort rather than taking the long view by boycotting or at least protesting against such deceptions? Let's vote this problem another way. Give those deceivers the choice; teach them the price of integrity's displeasure! Although their come-ons are for the most part bluffs having no legs to stand on, they're still in our faces thanks to the millipedic media's love for everything subversive.

Let's face it: we shall not anytime soon outshout the Jewish mediacracy's shills, as their ubiquitous deceit is a thing to wonder at. Too clever by half, they're on both sides of every issue, "election" and worldview, always announcing at the last minute who will be our next president, preemptive war strike or community targeted to "accept" Congolese "refugees." Then why not fall back upon an interim strategy that such coyness can't match?

As Jewish Supremacists, a tiny minority among their host Nations on planet Earth, imagine themselves reducing every other presence to a still lesser status somewhat like termites, let's settle for and play that role well. We can eat those wooden legs out from under such a Trojan worm, giving its thousand props the lie one revelation at a time.

For instance, if someone suffering from cognitive dissonance meets the Holohoax truth in an alternate news medium you've recommended, then gets all upset – "Lies! Nothing but garbage! How can someone believe such foolishness?" – don't follow suit and allow yourself to become equally shrill. Simply ask for the evidence behind that supposition; let your friend's faith in The Chosen speak its latest appeal, paying close attention, being patient till it's your turn.

"I've listened. Now please do likewise and stop interrupting for a minute while I'm speaking."

Opening statement

It's an incontrovertible fact. Anyone can easily verify that Jews control Hollywood, the TV networks and big daily newspapers which is why you've never heard about a certain Canadian citizen of German birth, Ernst Zündel, who published the pamphlet Did Six Million Really Die? The Jews took him to court and lost; it's in the transcripts. Appealing to the Supreme Court, yet again they failed. Zündel's team proved before that highest Canadian tribunal's jury that the Holocaust writers on whose accounts the case was based were liars. Innumerable books about the six million have turned out to be hoaxes, yet the Jewish mediacracy is printing them still. "Our" leaders betray us for fear of the Jews! And you've not heard how they pounced next upon the victorious litigant Ernst Zündel. Having seen through Canada's Zionist Occupied Government, he joined his American wife to live in the Smoky Mountains of Tennessee. But, in no time, the American ZOG called, abducting and handing him over on new trumped-up charges to Canada's ZOG, which jailed Mr. Zündel for two years before flying him to the German ZOG and an additional five years in prison. Over there they locked up even his lawyer!

Profiling the Jew

Truth be told, there's more than a hint of larceny, superbia and deceit in all too many a homo judaica. It's also a demonstrable fact that such ones are overly represented in today's infotainment, medical and law practices, everywhere aiming at deception, addiction and victory rather than factuality, cure or justice.

The common enemy of common sense

So let us in the first place have no more dealings with The International Jew than inescapably necessary, and secondly avoid his entrapments. Freedom of association with one's own is more than a statement of love for those we best understand; it also respects the privacy, habits and customs of every other race, whose aspirations would very likely match ours except for today's ongoing War on the Gentile Nations. Give Satan credit where it's due: we belatedly note that Greater Israel wasn't the limited victory those North African and Mideast bloodlettings were about. What, then?

Our naturally White Nations go only so far when observing that excessive pride, one of those deadly sins, "goeth before a fall." Yet Jewish Supremacism's paranoia always excuses its each and every Big Lie, like the gassed six million, in order to reach world dominion, taking deceit far beyond what ordinary minds can imagine possible – into that hole where Alice also stumbled and found fraud become truth.

Chutzpah, the Mad Hare called it.

Let's find a cure for our typical victim of today's totalitarian brainwashing who can only retort: "The Holocaust is a historical fact! A thousand testimonials have proven it. That many people couldn't be simply making up what they saw in those death camps."

Our reply

No? Even the Jew York Times, under pressure, has had to debunk several of its originally-presented-as-truthful narrations about "death camp" horrors experienced by book writers, including some who had never even been inside a compound. This, not a little deceitfully, is nowadays called "the free market," or supply and demand. Big Jewish Federal Reserve Notes, printed however many in whatever "face" values demanded by Jewish intermediators, keep the market booming for livelier Holocaust memoirs. Chew the legs from under their Holocaust, that biggest of lies surpassing even 9-11, Pearl Harbor, the Lavon Affair, USS Liberty, etc., and we've "pulled" these world government plans; they will collapse like WTC 7.

So, to the discomfiture of our kindred who would have us stop rocking this leaky ship the Jewnighted State while "refugees" continue climbing aboard, let's get on the secession lifeboats and bid them adios! but not before posing a few riddles they might ponder.

We must ask the "Judeo-Christian" who believes such stories to explain how so many of their writers managed to come out alive after spending months, often years, in those labor, yes, not murder, camps. Must his blind faith in the Jews-only rogue State of Israel approve its totalitarian influence over "our" warmongering government?

Anybody who has grasped anything of what's happening knows Iraq possessed no "weapons of mass destruction" when the American ZOG started dropping all those bunker-busting bombs and blowing holes through that country's armor with depleted uranium bullets that've caused thousands of deformed births. Why are those not war crimes?

North Africa

How quickly we forget the color of each ZOG-financed "revolution" designed as a prelude to "democracy's" advent. But then, when the Egyptians elect a president whom the foreign money doesn't like, that spigot closes on "voting" and opens up to another murdering puppet dictator.

In Libya likewise, once a prosperous State whose only fault was sticking with its gold- and oil-backed currency, the North Atlantic Treachery Ogre perceived a need for regime change there and just started bombing.

Another question. Why were Americans "voting" so much chaos into most of North Africa and the Middle East while ignoring their own interests at home? This includes the thousands of things "we" did, not for but to Serbia and the other Balkan States, Afghanistan, Kuwait, Pakistan, Palestine, Syria, Yemen, etc., leaving out just now Ukraine and Russia's former satellites for the purposes we'll consider next.

O, but you and I had no part in planning all of that? Really not? Somebody did. So why go "voting" representative "leaders" into office who then forget their promises?

Henry Ford allowed in his controversial The International Jew as how he couldn't actually disprove the Zionists' claim about The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion being a forgery, but called attention to the fact that everything in its blueprint for Jewish control of the world's governments was happening.

As that stridency continues, the Zionists financing and transporting Africans and Asians into Europe while similar riffraff pours in across our own borders unchecked are, according to the protocols, yammering for integrating other races into all White Nations. Without the brainwashing, which gives "multiculturalism" an appearance of working wonderfully thanks to temporary financing as a crutch anywhere its legs get wobbly, such ones as Dylann Roof and Vester Lee Flanagan would blow the lid off this farce.

How naive we were, supposing all those foreign-instigated "civil" wars throughout the Mideast and Africa aimed only for that much more new settlement and tributary landscape under "Greater Israel"! Seizing the West Bank and Golan Heights has now become an accomplished fact, as, for fear of the Jew, no leader of consequence would have us march in and oust those squatters.

So, having conquered and made subject to his demands the politicians of every land he surveys, how far does a bored Napoleon or Netanyahu cast his paranoid eye? Why, to the Urals and beyond; he and his officers will settle for nothing less than this world. Having cunningly made most legislatures, courts, premiers and police obedient, here comes the final push: for the people – most especially we armed-to-the-teeth Southern Aryans who still refuse to call it quits. Such breathtaking chutzpah now views several Nations surrounding occupied Palestine as useful proletariat for a one-two knockout punch against our unorganized resistance. Remember: a post World War II Khazarian pseudo-Semite squatting on others' lands takes the long view.

Today's sudden challenge

First, which is now accomplished, those Elders of Zion manipulated the economies so as to create joblessness among unskilled and uneducated potential fighters, then got boys from Dixie into uniforms invading Iraq – the East and West killing each other, same game plan as seventy-odd years ago with just as many mobilization contracts.

Second, following more than a decade of wars carefully orchestrated throughout the entire area from Afghanistan to Africa, it's unsafe there for any kind of family life or existence – just what that Zionist cabal had in mind from the get-go. So now they, via their munchkins, provide a young man wishing to be out of all that chaos and into Europe's official generosity with needed cash, escape route information and two square feet on some hired ship's deck.

The problem's solution

Europe doesn't want those economic "refugees" any more than does Alabama or Texas, but, for lack of such sovereignty as defines a legitimate State, how can honest taxpayers under a typical regime sending tribute to Napoleon stop this madness?

That is the biggest question of all. So let us get really busy and convert Zion's latest challenge into our opportunity.
